SOCIETY

The June of 1900 is already far on her career. Wonderfully well has she maintained her modesty and her sweet temper. Centuries of odes, sonnets, lyrics, and lovers have not altered the comeliness of her ways. She is as welcome as she ever was. Each year adds new beauty to her green, her roses, her birds and her brides. Time's master of ceremonies was negligent and unkind, when he allotted to June only thirty days, but July in spite of the Fourth and her extra day of life is a martyr to heat, to winds and to drouth. June herself does not murmur at her fate, only her courtiers. A garden of roses is easier to rear than a field of corn.

On Wednesday evening at half past seven o'clock at the First Presbyterian church, Miss Ena Katherine Ricketts, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Ricketts, was married to Mr. Ernest Clinton Folsom. The altar was a tropical forest of palms with here and there great vases of roses. At the entrance to the pews were bunches of pink roses and broad, white ribbons were stretched half way up the aisles. Mrs. P. V. M. Raymond played during the arrival of the guests in her wonderfully attractive manner. As the triumphant notes of the Lohengrin March sounded, the ushers, Mr. Will Raymond and Mr. Homer Honeywell, Mr. Arthur Walsh and Mr. J. R. Kennard, came down the east aisle. Down the west aisle a little behind, came the bridesmaids, Sir Joshua Reynolds' portraits, in their fluffy, graceful gowns of pink and broad, white picture hats with plumes, tulle and pink roses. Miss Frances Gere in pink silk mull led the bridal procession in which were Miss Broady and Miss Houtz in pink silk mull, and Miss Richards in pink crepe. At the altar the maids and ushers crossed to their places. After the maids, came Miss Harley, maid of honor, in a delicate gown of white mull with Mechlin frills. She was followed by the bride who entered on her father's arm. Her gown was of white satin. The bodice was made with a yoke and a garniture of Cluny lace, which had been worn by Mrs. Ricketts on her wedding day. At the altar they were met by Mr. Folsom and his bestman, Mr. Lowe Ricketts. Doctor Wharton performed the ceremony according to the ring service of the Methodist church.

From half after eight to ten o'clock, Mr. and Mrs. Ricketts were at home at Hillcrest, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Folsom. In the reception hall the guests were received by Mrs. A. J. Sawyer. In the drawing room they were met by the receiving party, Mr. and Mrs. Ricketts, Mr. and Mrs. Folsom, Miss Harley, maid of honor, and the bridesmaids, Miss Richards, Miss Frances Gere, Miss Houtz and Miss Broady. In the drawing room the decorations were pink roses and festoons of smilax. Red was the prevailing color of the library. Red shades were used on the chandelier over which grew an abundance of smilax. Red roses looked upon the occasion with grace and composure. On beyond was an artistic bower of green, wonderful with the delicate tracery of asparagus ferns from the ceiling and walls. Tall white roses were massed frequently in the fairy green walls. White and green shades were on the chandelier. Punch was served from an immense palette covered with white and green tracings, by Mrs. Frank M. Hall in a white gown and picture hat. She was assisted by Miss Wineland, Miss Spurck and Miss Woodward. The dining room was a bewitching sight. People lingered there. It was far too attractive for hasty greetings. The chandelier was green with smilax. Shortly below the chandelier a broad ring of smilax, in which eleven pink tapers burned, was suspended. From this ring came streamers of smilax to thirteen silver candelsticks placed in a circle around the table, and from which pink candles gave mellow light. The table centre was a great bowl of La France roses, tall and beautiful in their coloring. Smilax was here and there and everywhere in the room. Mrs. Isaac M. Raymond served a pink ice. She was assisted by Mrs. H. T. Folsom, the Misses Henrietta Hawley, Clara Hammond, Ellen Gere, Colson and Charlotte Clark. Miss Clark presided over the bride and groom's cake. Others assisting on the first floor were: Mesdames C. H. Gere, L. C. Richards, H. H. Wilson and M. W. Folsom. Those assisting on the second floor were: Mesdames J. A. R. Miller and G. W. Wineland, Miss Helen Wilson, Miss Grace Wilson and Miss Georgia Field. The gifts were of an exceeding great number and exquisite beauty. Mrs. Folsom's dignity of bearing, sincerity and brightness of manner have long made her a Lincoln favorite. Mr. Folsom is a man active and alert in business. Mr. and Mrs. Folsom left at eight o'clock on Thursday morning for New York and Boston. They took with them warm greetings from their hosts of friends.

Mrs. A. binus Nance and Miss Nance, gave a reception on Thursday morning
