One of the ablest and most honest editors of the state, Mr. Ross Hammond of the Fremont Tribune, thus expresses his sound convictions regarding the Bartley parole:

"The apologists for Joe Bartley, and Mr. Bartley himself, says he was making restitution of state money when he was arrested, and had paid over $143,000 to the state after his shortage was known. This, they say, was good evidence of his purpose to convert securities into cash and repay all money due the state but when he was arrested he quit the work and finally went to the penitentiary without making any further financial restitution. It must be remembered, however, that Bartley was convicted and sent to prison for embezzling the proceeds of a state warrant, negotiated at Omaha; that the proceeds for this warrant for $210,000 were placed to the credit of his individual account and not to the state's. Therefore this did not come within the category of deposits in small banks which he sought to withdraw slowly to prevent the creation of a panic among them by a too sudden call. He was clearly guilty of a very great offense against the state, his party and his confiding bondsmen. The anguish and tears of his family are sad features of the unfortunate case, but there are anguish and tears of innocent people in all such cases, and as touching and sad as the suffering may be it cannot be permitted to weigh against the duty of society demanded by a strict exacting of penance in proportion to the enormity of crimes committed against it.

"He was not a criminal at heart," is a common expression in extenuation of guilt. It makes a mockery of the strict integrity and honesty that is becoming too little prized by sentimentalists who are ready to forgive because all men are not perfect in their deportment. It is a tendency in the wrong direction and a growing one. Neither Bartley nor Bolln should have been liberated. It puts a premium on dishonesty that it is not for the public good and this, we believe, is the verdict of the honest common people who have tired of seeing favoritism shown the big transgressors of the law."

A PROPHECY FULFILLED.
EMILY GUIWITS

Let me ask you, Billy Bryan,
Why the mischief you are tryin'
To convince the people that you're not a crank?

Don't you know it's very foolish
On your part to be so mulish
Over that confounded little silver plank?

You are such an expert bluffer
That an ordinary duffer
Might be fooled by all your little campaign tricks
If he didn't just remember
Between now and next November
That you bluffed the same old way in ninety-six:

You went howling through creation
That destruction and starvation
Was the certain fate of every mother's son
If the following election
Didn't go in your direction
With your crazy notions of sixteen to one.

But you see you were not in it,
Not one single blessed minute,
When the voters really settled down to biz;
They were not so green and silly
As you seemed to think them, Billy,
When you tried to fill them up on silver fizz.

And I'll tell you, Billy Bryan,
That I really think you're lyin'
When you say our party principles are trash;

For you've put in every hour
Since McKinley was in power
Filling up your pockets with gold standard cash.

Now to be consistent, honey,
You must give up all that money
Which you made when politics were out of joint;

Do we think we see you do it?
Not one penny—if you knew it—
Would you give up. Do you voters see the point?

If this little object lesson
Fails to set the people guessin'
Till their Yankee wits see how things ought to be,
We'll own up were mistaken,
That our faith is sadly shaken,
And hang our harps upon a weeping willow tree.

The late Jacob S. Rogers, an eccentric locomotive builder of Paterson, N. J., was a good man not to be related to. He never manifested any particular interest in art, but he was determined that his relatives should not have any of his money. So after leaving them a few scanty bequests he left his immense fortune, estimated at nearly $8,000,000, to the Metropolitan Museum of Art of New York. The town of Paterson, where the money was made, will receive nothing. How much the lawyers will receive remains to be seen, as there is a big law suit in sight.
