entirely, even for street wear. A white batiste and embroidery gown looked particularly well on her slight figure last Saturday at the luncheon hour. Her color is very high, and white is most becoming.

Another new feature of the fall outfit is the point d'esprit petticoat for evening gowns. It is made of flounces edged with baby ribbon in white, and is a successful innovation which will to some extent take the place so long held by those of fancy silk.

Mrs. Clarence Mackay and her husband rode in an automobile Saturday during the heated afternoon. Mrs. Mackay was clad in a sombre dark gown, with the smallest black hat I have ever known her to wear. In the evening they dined at Sherry's, and she was beautifully gowned.

Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor were also there, and seemed none the worse for the accident of the afternoon at the races.

The evening display of gowns in the corridors of the various hotels is wonderful.

Mrs. John Drexel has some stunning costumes and wraps. Her wraps are always handsomer than those worn by other women, it seems to me.

Friday evening she wore one of the prettiest pink flower hats I have ever seen.

Mr. Chauncey Depew gave a large dinner last week in the palm room of the Waldorf-Astoria, and the gowns of the women attracted much attention. There were several in black-and-white, one a heavy white satin with black stripes, combined with fine black lace, as delicate as cobwebs in texture. Black-and-white seems a favorite combination, and will be much in evidence all the winter.

Mrs. Charles Ballantyne, gown stout, wears a black taffeta tailor gown, which is most pretentious and very pretty. It has a short coat with a full sleeve to the elbow, finished in lovely lace ruffles and ribbon bows. The shirt-sleeve shows below this with very good effect. The skirt was very long and very full from the knee. The hat was a small black affair made of silk and chiffon, with scarcely any trimming.

Mrs. E. D. Morgan wore a pink and white silk, lace-trimmed gown on Sunday night, at dinner. Miss Blight appeared in black with a large black hat, and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt wore white.

Many women are wearing hearts of solid blue turquoise matrix, suspended just over the heart. This is a very pretty conceit. Some of them are exquisitely mounted, others not at all, but merely pierced and threaded on a very slender gold chain.

Theatre Spitters.

Mr. R. B. Middlebrook, city counselor, has drafted the ordinance to prohibit spitting in theatres, which will be introduced by Alderman Frank Peck at the next council meeting. The ordinance is almost certain to pass under a suspension of the rules, as there is a general demand for it. The impression prevailed that the existing ordinance prohibiting spitting in public buildings included theatres, and with the city counselor's holding that it does not, the need for the amendment is felt. The proposed ordinance not only has the support of a great majority of the patrons of theatres, but is asked by the proprietors and managers of theatres. There are not many theatre goers who are guilty of spitting on the floors during a performance, and yet there are enough of them to cause annoyance and disgust to many others.

Chief Hayes of the police force is anxious that the ordinance be passed at once. "If it is passed," he said this morning, "I will enforce it strictly. With the co-operation of the theatre managers we will have little trouble in arresting the offenders."

"I believe," continued Chief Hayes, "that it should be an offense to spit on the side walks. Where loafers congregate it would be an easy matter to stop their spitting if we had the authority to arrest them for it. Of course, people walking along the sidewalks might spit without detection, but the enactment of a prohibiting ordinance, even though convictions might be difficult, would have a salutary effect."

Sergeant Frank Snow of the police force said today that about four years ago an attorney at law of some prominence was arrested for spitting on the sidewalk and was fined in police court. He was given a stay of execution, however. That is the only attempt to extend the rule of the anti-spitting ordinance to the sidewalks. Two of the assistant city physicians are said to have contracted tuberculosis at the city hall by reason of the city patients spitting on the floor of the hallway just outside of the office of the board of health. Doctor Ernest Boeber, when appointed assistant city physician seven years ago, had no symptoms of consumption. Three years ago he left the city a consumptive and is now in Colorado. The same state of facts exists in the case of Doctor C. H. Colvin, who left Kansas City eighteen months ago. Mr. Charles Mallon, clerk of the board of health, says that both physicians ascribe their disease to the habit of patients afflicted with tuberculosis spitting in the hall. The board of health is supporting the proposed ordinance and will aid in its enforcement.

Alderman Peck says he will confine the new amendment to theatres, as he believes by so doing the crusade in this particular will be more effective and will meet with no opposition.—Kansas City Star.

A Great Sunday Magazine.

Not only is the news of the whole world covered with unexampled fullness in the Sunday issues of The Chicago Record-Herald, but every edition embraces also an exceedingly choice assortment of illustrated special articles ranking with the highest products of our best magazines. Such well-known and popular writers as William E. Curtis, Clara Morris, "Bob" Burdette and Frank G. Carpenter are regular contributors to the Sunday Chicago Record-Herald. There are many special articles in each issue of particular interest to women, including the latest fashions, household economy, art, music and the drama, etc. There is a beautifully illustrated special sporting section which not only covers all the news of the sporting world with a thoroughness that satisfies to the utmost, but includes also entertaining departments by such sporting experts as Tim Murnane who writes of baseball matters, Malachy Hogan, noted for his "talks on pugilism," Will Logan, Jr., who conducts the department of "harness horses," and L. E. Cavalier, The Record-Herald's "Rod and Gun" expert. The children's page, the comic section and other entertaining departments round out this mammoth Sunday magazine to the entire satisfaction of its readers.

"Take my advice!" said I to the burglar, warningly.

"Pray add that to the list of valuables overlooked by me, which you will, of course, give to the papers in the morning," said he.

Here I quite lost my temper, and fired into the darkness. A mocking laugh came back, and all was still.—Town Topics.
