

FASHION LETTER.

Lady Modish in Town Topics.

The chill weather has this week brought out a number of new coat models and a perfect deluge of new neck boas.

A favorite fall coat is quite long, reaching within a foot of the bottom of the gown. The backs vary, some being entirely loose, others falling in folds from a fitted yoke, and still others half fitting. Very few are tight to the figure in the back, and all are loose in front. The new Empire coats are close fitting back and front, but it will doubtless be mid-season or later before they become popular. Some ultra-fashionable women are already wearing them, but they are not particularly becoming. It is a style one has to grow to like, or become educated to, in order to really admire. One of the long, loose coats, with the big, loose sleeve finished in a wide turned-back cuff, is worn in "The Messenger Boy," at Daly's. It is of fine white broadcloth trimmed down the fronts, which turn back, with pink cloth and hand embroidery. The same thing is worn in tan and black by two well-dressed southern women now at one of the large hotels. Later this will be seen in velours or sealskin, with trimmings of chinchilla. A prominent house is now exhibiting a beautiful one of mink. A short coat of chinchilla, with blouse effect and muff to match, was worn by a guest on one of the steam yachts during the last race. This is a charming mode for a slight figure, and, with the new full sleeve, is particularly effective in mink.

Velvet is much used for walking costumes, and corduroys and plain velvets are equally effective. With these costumes the Eton jacket is still a prime favorite, although many modish women are wearing tabs and skirts of various lengths. It is safe to say, however, that the real long-tailed coat will never be a success with a short skirt. Those shown at present are ridiculous. It is wonderful how popular walking costumes have become. I saw a handsome one on board the revenue cutter Seminale the day of one of the races. It was of the new material so popular in London for automobile suits, called pony-skin, and was made with a little double-breasted Eton, as chic as could be, and the plain skirt was heavily stitched over all the seams.

The evening gowns worn at dinner after the races demand further attention. A gray peau de soie—which material was never so popular as at present—was extremely attractive. The skirt showed the long slender point in front almost to the feet, flanked on either side with many full flounces, each edged with a delicate ruching. No material is used anywhere in the trimming save the peau de soie, and yet it was one of the successes of the week, judging from the attention it received. Another delicate robe, clinging and of the winding order, was of plain tan Japanese silk, made Princess and fully tucked about the waist, the front groups extending to the hem of the skirt. The yoke and front were of Russian lace interwoven with pale blue velvet ribbon, large rosettes of the same ribbon finishing the straps which crossed the front from throat to waist. This ladder effect in straps seems very much favored by girls of eighteen or twenty. Black velvet is often used, and is generally over white lace of some sort. A pretty gray foulard with white dots was worn by a girl who was driving with her parents. It had deep white lace let in very full from each shoulder. The elaborate ends of the lace formed an Eton effect below the bust. From the shoulder down the velvet straps kept the lace in place, and made a beautiful finish to the gown. Each strap had a tiny steel buckle to hold it in place at either end.

Taffetas, made with full tucked flounces joined to the body of the skirt by very wide insertion of heavy lace, are very much favored, in delicate shades, for evening wear. In dark shades this material is still used for street wear in tailor-mades, which will continue to be worn until the colder weather drives them in.

Lansdowne is an old-fashioned fabric again coming to the front. The box-pleated shirt waists made of it are very pretty, and later than those of taffeta. This material is so soft and clinging that it is largely used for the newest dinner gowns. An imported gown of palest yellow Lansdowne shown by one of the leading shops quite fascinated me. It has lace let in all over it to show a yet paler yellow beneath. A delicate heliotrope choux of velvet, with long ends, is the only color used in its garnishing.

I do not much fancy the new petticoat called the "lampshade" or "garter," about which there has been more or less talk recently. It is made of many flounces of silk, and is attached below the knee. Its advantage is supposed to give a more slender effect to its wearer and to do away with any possible wrinkles which might mar the beauty of a Princess costume. I cannot imagine it as a success, however, as it must necessarily interfere with freedom in walking. On a short person it would be absolutely ridiculous.

The Two Best in One.

People who formerly considered The Chicago Record to be America's model daily or who believed The Chicago Times-Herald to be premier among American newspapers now have an opportunity of judging every day how remarkably complete and excellent in every department is that great metropolitan daily, The Chicago Record-Herald, which combines "the two best in one." All the popular features of both The Chicago Record and The Chicago Times-Herald are included in The Chicago Record-Herald. In the Sunday issues especially the great advantages of the combination of all the resources and world-wide facilities of the two papers united in the combination are made manifest. The world's news is covered with unexampled fullness, due to the fact that never before in the history of journalism did an American newspaper possess news facilities so varied and extensive.

The Heart of a Mouse.

A tiny mouse who lived near the house of a magician begged him to save her from the cat of whom she lived in deadly terror.

So the magician changed the mouse into a cat, and she went away delighted.

In a few days she came back again in terror. "Oh, save me, save me now from the dog," she begged.

And the magician changed her to a dog.

A few days more, and back she came—this time in deadly fear of a tiger.

"Nonsense," said the magician. "You have only the heart of a mouse, and afraid you will always be. It is the heart that tells!"

She (at the afternoon tea, to him)—
Oh, I'm so glad you came. Mamma says it's almost impossible to get any man who is half way decent to come to an afternoon tea.—Town Topics.

Mary Egger, plaintiff, vs.
Noah Egger, defendant.

NOTICE.

Said defendant is hereby notified that said plaintiff has commenced an action against him in said Court, the object, purpose and prayer of which, and of the petition therein filed, is to obtain a decree of divorce from said defendant, and to bar him of all interest in and to the following lands and tenements situate and being in said County and State, that is to say: the east one-half of the southeast quarter of section numbered two in township numbered seven, of range numbered six,—both on the ground that said defendant willfully abandoned and deserted the said plaintiff, and has willfully been absent from her since the month of October, 1888.

And said defendant is further notified to appear in said action and make answer to said petition on or before the 18th day of November, A. D. 1901, or the allegations in said petition will be taken as true and judgment and decree be rendered accordingly.
