Women in Politics and in It to Stay

The woman's Bryan club has decided to struggle along, meeting now and then, awaiting that indefinite day when something may happen.

A week or so ago it was a difficult matter to hold a meeting. A few of the members gathered and it was decided to make an effort extraordinary to gather in the followers in sufficient strength to disband. Accordingly the word was sent around,

Three or four days later the club held another session. From the beginning two factions were apparent.

In the treasury was the sum of $80 gathered for campaign purposes by the faithful. Some of the members wanted to donate this money to sweet charity and adjourn sine die. Mr. Bryan had diplomatically announced that he was out of politics, it was declared, hence what object could the club have for a further lease of life? Dissolution was the only proper remedy.

But Mrs, Belle G. Bigelow said nay. She was supported by a strong skirmish line of members who wanted to keep the organization in skeleton form if but one meeting was held each summer. It was not fitting to give political money to charitable purposes, Besides some of these days Mr. Bryan might be senator, governor or maybe a presidential candidate again. What then would be the position of the club? It couldn't be reorganized. Nebraska's favorite son would miss its stalwart support in the Third great battle.

So the suspended animation people won out by a narrow majority and the club is still numbered among the organized.

Originally the organization was termed the Mary Bryan club. It came into existence as the result of a deplorable lack of offices in the ladies' bimetallic league. The scarcity of club presidencies and the number of aspirants led to considerable internecine strife and the consequent branching off of the two organizations.
