Well Behaved:
The Students of Lincoln

Five thousand students in the various Lincoln institutions of learning and but nineteen of them were arrested during the past year, according to the records of Chief of Police Hoagland. In no college town or city in the United States is the percentage of arrests so low.

Students are a peculiar people. Most of them come from the best homes in the state. Their early training has been of the best. Offenses for the most part spring from peculiar temptations.

Riding wheels on sidewalks is a frequent cause of arrest. Petty thieving, strange as it may seem, is another. Rich or poor, the young man or woman at school finds ready use for the monthly allowance. If the individuality of the student is weak, the instincts just a little doubtful, the sneak thief impulse breaks out. Instead of buying a book, the culprit will "swipe" one. Drawing instruments, laboratory apparatus and dictionaries are appropriated without a thought for the ethical phase of the question.

Sometimes it is money and not a year passes without coin is taken from the pockets of some student by a dishonest fellow. Watches are occasionally stolen and rubbers, umbrellas and overcoats are safe only in the check room. Hats are classified in a similar manner.

Mistakes will happen, of course, and when garments disappear it is often through error.

When the erring one is apprehended, a stiff lecture from those in authority will usually right everything and lead to reformation. In nine cases out of every ten the offender does not realize the heinousness of his offense until he is roundly lectured by some older person. Ideas of right and wrong are crude and the student has not taken the time to think of the other fellow.

Occasionally the case gets to the chronic stage and then Chief Hoagland takes a hand in the matter. After a fatherly talk the offender is given another chance. Should he err again he is sent home to his parents. With the exception of thoughtless offenses against the city ordinances no case of this kind comes before the judge.

When the university boys go out to celebrate, it takes a cool head to avoid trouble in some instances. The students are enthusiastic. The rag tag element, the bums of the city, the itinerant loafers, are jealous of the noise and shouting and seek a quarrel. They either pick on the students directly or work to embroil the latter with the police. The seekers after mental culture, as a usual thing, are fair and gentlemanly but withal hotheaded and heedless of results. So "scraps" occur at

IN MEMORY OF ROCHAMBEAU

The unveiling of the Rochambeau statue in Washington will revive interest in the great French general, who, with his six thousands picked French troops, so ably helped Washington to defeat the British at Yorktown, an event which virtually closed the revolutionary war. The visit will serve to emphasize the feelings of friendship and respect which always have existed between the peoples of the two greatest republics of modern times.
