

SOCIETY NOTES

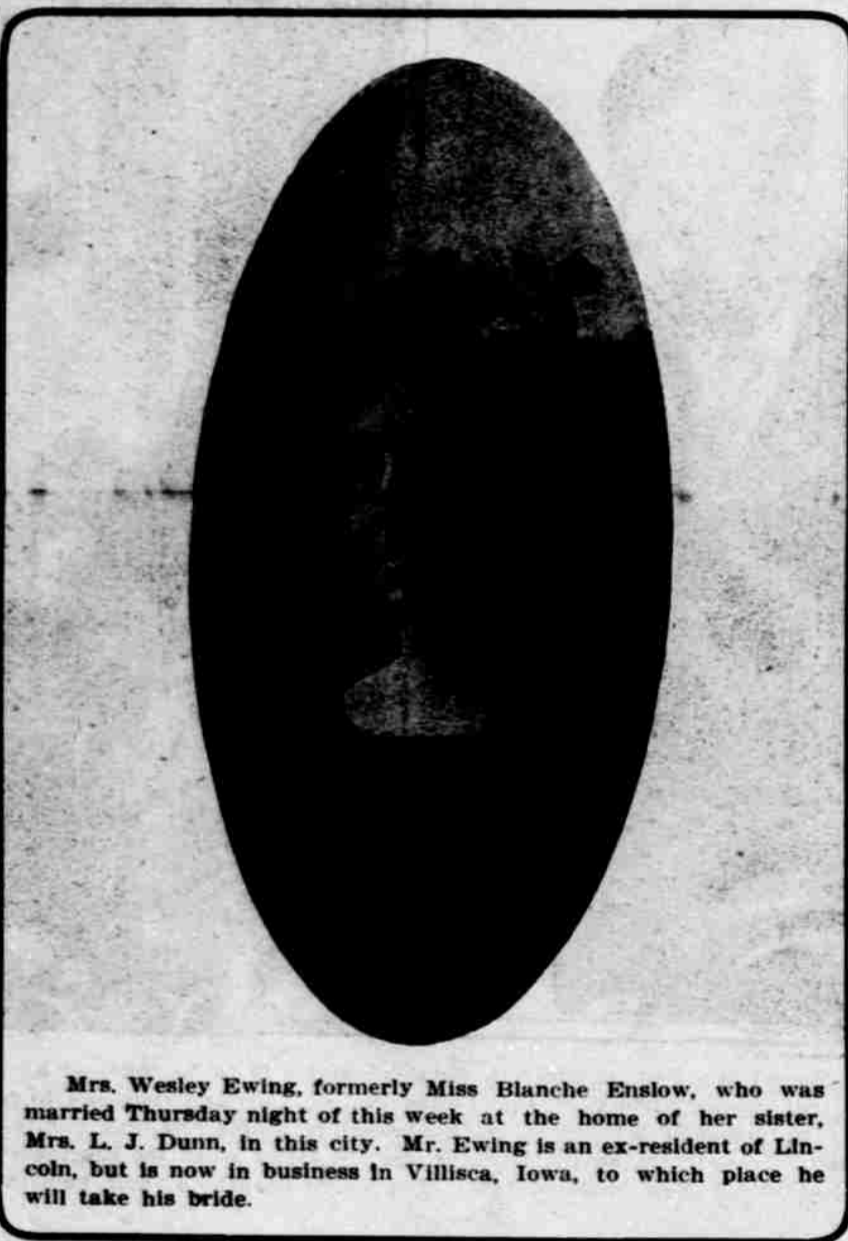

LIFE'S MAZY WHIRL

The state fair has exceeded in importance all other events of this week, and everybody and his wife have gone, and have exclaimed over the marvelous pumpkins and cabbages, have looked at the tempting displays of fruit until their mouths watered, and listened to the crowing and cackling of fowls, the neighing of horses, the grunting of porkers, and the lowing of cattle, until their heads ached, and have gone home inflated with pride because of the wondrous productions of this great state. Society both from the city and the rural districts was at the fair. Many an adoring swain brought his sweetheart to see the marvels of the exhibition, and the attractions of the town, and many bridegrooms came with their brides to spend their honeymoons in the capital city. Nature favored the promoters of the exposition with glorious weather, and all in all this fair week has been a memorable one. The important society event of the week was the Enslow-Ewing wedding, which was celebrated Thursday evening.

Miss Blanche Enslow, daughter of Mrs. Martha Enslow, and Mr. Wesley Ewing of Villisca, Iowa, were married Thursday evening at eight o'clock at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. L. J. Dunn. Reverend H. O. Rowlands of the First Baptist church, assisted by Reverend F. L. Wharton of St. Paul Methodist Episcopal, performed the ceremony. Miss Bessie Burrus, before the bridal party appeared, sang "O Promise Me," very charmingly, and after the song, she played Mendelssohn's wedding march as the procession entered the drawing room. The bride and her maid of honor, who was her sister, Miss Tempa Enslow, descended the stairs together and were met at the foot by the groom and his best man, who was Doctor Yungblut. Two flower maidens, Miss Nita Dunn and Miss Hazel Clawson, both gowned in white and carrying baskets of flowers, headed the procession and entering the drawing room separated and took their places at either side of an arch of palms. The maid of honor and best man followed and took their places next the flower girls, then came the bride and groom, who stood together in the center of the semicircle beneath the palms. The bride's gown was of white French batiste, with horizontal tucks, inserting and a graduated flounce on the skirt. The bodice had a lace yoke and stock, and a girdle and sash of polka dotted liberty satin ribbon. The bouquet was of bride roses. The maid of honor wore a dainty pink organdie with a yoke of tucked white point d'esprit outlined with applique over a twist of pink panne.

The drawing room was adorned with palms and pink roses. In the hall a row of palms screened a mandolin orchestra, which played during the reception, and the balustrade was festooned with asparagus. The sitting room was in green and white, and was adorned with palms, smilax and white roses. In one corner, in a booth made of graceful white lace draperies covered with asparagus, Miss Lois Burrus, assisted by Misses Gertrude Kincaide, Edna Baker and Claire Canon, served punch. The dining room was entirely in white and the table gleamed with cut glass and silver. A Battenburg center piece and dollies lay on the polished table, and in the center on a mirror stood a tall vase of white asters, encircled with white candles in crystal sticks. White candles and bouquets of white roses were on the buffet and over the entire ceiling, radiating from the chandelier were festoons of white ribbon. Seated at the table were Mrs. T. S. Allen and Mrs. Robert Beatty of Kansas City, who were assisted in serving white ices and cakes by Misses Ada Waugh, Florence Prescott, Gertrude Ewing and Bessie Burrus. All of the ladies who served were gowned in white. The spacious piazza was furnished with rugs, divans, easy chairs, and cushions, and was illumined with Japanese lanterns. Only relatives and intimate friends witnessed the marriage, but Mrs. Enslow had invited a large company of friends to a reception which followed and many called to extend felicitations and to say au revoir to the bride ere she left for her new home. Mrs. L. W. Lavender, of Omaha, greeted the guests in the hall and Mrs. Enslow was assisted in the drawing room by Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Dunn, M. and Mrs. C. M. Kincaide, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Bennett, and Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Jones. Mrs. Enslow wore a gown of black liberty satin with a purple velvet choux. Mrs. Dunn's toilet was of linen batiste with blue satin stripes made over tafeta. The yoke was outlined with medallions of lace and blue satin ribbons.
