Omega Psi, the sorority of sororities, is likely to fall into oblivion for lack of interest on the part of the individual sororities which constitute the organization. One or two of the sororities have withdrawn nationally, and individual chapters all over the country are dropping out. The local chapter will give its annual banquets so long as the present members are in town.

The St. Paul Globe offers these rather sarcastic suggestions for Christmas presents:

- Suggestions for mother when she starts out to purchase father a Christmas gift:
- A table set of doilies of Cluny lace.
- A point lace collar.
- One of those large and fashionable sable muffs.
- A pearl necklace.
- A diamond hat pin.
- An ice wool fascinator.
- One of those new bead bags mounted in gold.

On Monday, at one o'clock, in the ordinary of the Lincoln hotel, an elegant luncheon was given by Mrs. William M. Leonard in honor of Miss Burr and Mr. Meadows. At the triennial National Council of Jewish Women, just held in Baltimore, the corresponding secretary, Miss Sadie American, gave the following report of the growth and present status of the council:

"It is eight years since the council became a fact in the organization of its first section in January, 1894. At the end of the first working year there were thirteen sections, and in 1899, at the last triennial meeting, there were fifty sections, nine of which have since gone out of existence. Since that time thirty sections have been organized, six of them being at present in a state of suspended animation.

"The total number of active sections now is eighty, sixty-four of that number being senior sections and sixteen being junior sections, and the total membership is about 8,000, the junior enrollment being about 500."

In connection with her account of the departmental activities of the organization, Miss American stated that with the Young Men's Hebrew association 82 study circles are carried on by the various sections. Nineteen sections report 78 lectures, of which 17 were by non-resident speakers, Jew and non-Jew, theologians and laymen. Mission schools to the number of 18, with an average attendance of 2,500, have been established by 16 sections, with 162 teachers, of whom 141 are volunteers and 21 paid. One section reports work in a congregation, one with a sisterhood and one with the Young Men's Hebrew association.

Miss American stated also that 33 sections report activity in practical and preventive philanthropy, including settlements, kindergartens, day nurseries, libraries, kitchen gardens and work of various sorts among children and adults.

The first annual art exhibit and sale of the Woman's club occurred Monday afternoon at the rooms in the library building.

Before the parlors were opened for the exhibit the club met in the assembly room, where the announcements were made, prominent among which was a mention of the violin recital to be given before the club next Friday evening at Fraternity hall, by Herr Christian Oelschlagel, to which each member can take an escort.

An amendment to the constitution requiring application for membership accompanied by the fee of one dollar, to be presented to the treasurer, and by her to the board of directors, instead of bringing names directly before the club as it reads in the present by-law, was read and will be acted upon at the next regular meeting.

Mrs. E. Lewis Baker sang "Bright Star of Love," by Robaudi, with flute obligato beautifully played by Mr. Baker. "The Red Fan," with musical accompaniment by Miss Agnes McLaughlin, was recited by Miss Josephine Poynter. Both Mrs. Baker and Miss Poynter were received with favor.

The exhibit, which was kept open for three days, was well worth a visit. The walls of the parlors were covered with
