The strong man knowing his weakness avoids temptation; the weak man priding himself upon his strength seeks it to his sorrow.

Kismet

No more doth war and rumors red,
Or politics, concern us.
The summer days have swiftly sped
The leaves have fallen cold and dead,
And we must start the furnace.

We sigh for dear departed days
Of summer with their breezes;
For we must hustle out and raise
At divers times and sundry ways
The coal when weather freezes.

Alas! Alack! That summer's sun
Which lately hath receded
Was not, when time was first begun,
Warmed up and through the heavens
run
In winter when 'twas needed.

Infalible

"Did you every try your fortune with cards?"
"Yes, and that's the way I lost mine."

Psychological

"Do you believe in spirits?"
"O, yes; but I've learned not to put any trust in them."

Dismal Failure

"Was your last magazine poem a success, Rhymely?"
"Financially, yes; but otherwise, no."
"What do you mean?"
"The pay was satisfactory, but everybody understood it."

Mythology Outdone

"Is DeRant making good as a stage singer and musician?"
"Well, DeRant has old Orpheus outdone."
"How's that?"
"Old Orpheus' music was so good that the rocks and trees followed him. DeRant's is so bad that the produce market follows him."

Boygraphs

It is hardly right to blame a boy for taking to the streets when all the efforts of the parents are confined to making the girl's room attractive. A boy is not to be blamed for doubting the worth of the advice against smoking that is given by his father between whiffs of a pipe. Boys will be boys, but that is no reason why they should not be gentlemen. A boy in the house is worth two on the streets. The boy who remembers his mother is not likely to get far away from God. When a boy begins to comb his hair and polish his shoes without being driven to it, it a sure sign that he has met her. And only a foolish parent will try to plague him about it.

Entitled to More

Old soldiers of the west, especially those of Nebraska, remember General Dilworth of Hastings. A braver soldier never lived, and a more genial gentleman never made happy an evening around a campfire. During one of the skirmishes prior to the engagement on Lookout mountain General Dilworth was standing upon the breastworks taking an observation, with the bullets singing a chorus around him. "Jake" Dew, a private in the ranks, stood up beside the general, who turned and said:

"Get down, Jake; they'll hit you."
"But what about you?" queried Dew.
"You only get $13 a month," said Dilworth, "and musn't take any chances. I get $240 a month to stand up and get shot at."

Just then a cloud of shrapnel came singing along, and Dilworth jumped down and hugged the earth. Dew, with his nose shoved into the ground, exclaimed:

"Why ain't you standing up, general?"

"They don't pay enough," was the response.

A Dozen Don't's

Don't meet trouble half way.
Don't waste bear shot on snowbirds.
Don't give advice to a starving man.
Feed him first.
Don't be a "good fellow" at the expense of your family.

Don't expect to be truly happy without making others happy.

Don't set your son an example and then punish him for following it.

Don't try to fight the devil with fire. Take a weapon with which he is not familiar.

Don't expect people to profit by the advice you give without following it yourself.

Don't forget that the most tedious conversations are those in which "I" is the text.

Don't worry over today's troubles until tomorrow, and then it will not be necessary.

Don't make the mistake of thinking that the pleasure you buy is equal to the happiness you earn.

Don't make the mistake of thinking that a knowing look will always serve the same purpose as real knowledge.

When Congressman Kitchen, of North Carolina visited a strange town not long ago, relates the New York Times, he found out that his razor was badly in need of sharpening. He

Cigarette and Tobacco Habits

Cured Absolutely Free by Sample Package of Tobacco-Specific

Each of the undersigned for himself freely and voluntarily certifies as follows:

I hereby certify that I was completely and permanently cured of the tobacco habit by a free sample package of Tobacco-Specific, more than a year ago. I have positively disliked tobacco ever since I took the sample, have not used any in any form, and my health has been better than it was before. I state these facts freely and voluntarily, hoping other victims will profit by my experience.

dropped in at the local barber's shop and gave the razor to the proprietor, a large fat negro.

"Have it ready by 6 o'clock," the congressman directed. "I'll come by for it."

He was there at the appointed time, but the blade had not been sharpened. "Sorry, boss," said the negro, "but Ah jes cudn't git it ixed in time."

"Well, well, that's bad," answered Mr. Kitchen. "I've got to go to a party tonight."

At this the barber suddenly went into the back of the shop, and much to the distinguished visitor's surprise, brought out a blade with six or seven deep notches in it.

"Yer c'n use dis, boss," he said, holding it out.

"Why, what do you mean? What can I do with that razor?"

"It's all right, boss," said the negro in an injured tone. "It's de one I always carries when I goes to a party."

Lee's Faithful Soldier

General Fitzhugh Lee, in narrating reminiscences of the civil war, said that just after the surrender at Appomattox he was riding along a lane, when he met a North Carolina soldier trudging along on foot.

"Where are you going?" asked General Lee.

"Back to join General Bob Lee," said the other. "I've been home on a furlough."

"Throw away your gun and go back home again. Lee's surrendered."

"Lee's surrendered?" repeated the amazed soldier.

"That's what I said."

"Then it must have been that darned Fitz Lee. Bob Lee would never surrender," and the soldier resumed his tramp.
