

An Associated Press dispatch from St. Paul, Minn., says: Attorney General McReynolds served notice that the government was opposed to giving the Union Pacific railroad any further extension of time within which to dispose of its holdings of Southern Pacific stock as ordered by the supreme court. In doing so he made known to the railroad's attorneys and to United States Circuit Court Judges Sanborn, Cook and Smith, at a hearing in the dissolution proceedings, his objections to the two latest plans proposed by the railroad for getting rid of its $126,650,000 worth of Southern Pacific stock. Mr. McReynolds declared that he could see no objection to the proposed exchange by the railroad of $38,000,000 worth of its Southern Pacific stock (a little less than one-third of its total holdings) for $21,000,000 worth of Baltimore & Ohio stock held by the Pennsylvania railroad. He asked the court for a brief time, however, within which to investigate the stockholdings of the various railroads involved.

Permission to make this exchange was sought by the railroad in a supplemental plan of dissolution.

After hearing lengthy arguments on both sides the court took the matter under advisement. No intimation was given whether either or both of the plans submitted, involving a year's delay, would be approved, or whether the court would follow the attorney general's suggestion and attempt to dispose of the stock itself through the medium of a receiver.

A London cablegram, carried by the Associated Press says: Official confirmation of the news of the acceptance of Russian arbitration by the Balkan allies still is lacking, but diplomatic circles believe the report to be correct. Bulgaria desires arbitration immediately, and as a consequence is opposed to the meeting of the four premiers, as that would tend to delay matters. The proposed meeting of the Bulgars primarily was the cause of the fall of the Gueshoff cabinet which is likely under the circumstances to remain in power.

Bulgaria felt that she would be outnumbered if the premiers met, and while consistently opposing such a meeting, as consistently has demanded Russian arbitration. Greece also has desired Russia's aid to settle the quarrel, and Serbia was reluctantly compelled to assent.

Railroad stock suffered a heavy slump on account of the decision of the supreme court in the Minnesota rate case.

Theodore Roosevelt spoke at Buffalo, N. Y., in support of Governor Sulzer's plan for a direct primary law.

An Associated Press dispatch from Constantinople says: The Turkish grand vizier, Mahmoud Scheffket Pasha, was assassinated by two men armed with revolvers, who attacked him while he was proceeding in his motor car to the sublime porte. It is believed in government circles here that the assassination of the grand vizier was the outcome of a plot against the committee of union and progress (young Turks.)

Ibrahim Bey, the aid de camp of Mahmoud Scheffket Pasha, was also killed by the assassins. It is understood that the men who committed the crime are civilians.

A New York dispatch, carried by the Associated Press says: Secretary McAdoo's overnight offer to issue emergency currency completely surprised the financial district. None of the bankers would express an opinion on the subject, but it was clear that the secretary's announcement was interpreted, even before his explanatory statement of today, as an act to reassure the legitimate interests of the country, especially those of a mercantile and industrial character.

Local bankers believe that the offer will have the effect of releasing large amounts of time money, in which a severe stringency was threatening. Recently over-year money was utterly lacking in this market, while the rates for four, five and six months hardened perceptibly. One effect of the proposed measure was a sharp rally in stocks and stock exchange houses reported a better investment demand than at any time since the recent depression. No small part of the inquiry came from out of town sources, where the effect of Secretary McAdoo's announcement appears to have been received with greater encouragement than in local circles.

The following explanation is given in a dispatch from Washington: The treasury department, it was stated, had been informed by bankers within the last few weeks that some stringency might be experienced in moving the crops. If they had assurance that relief could be had under the provision of the Aldrich-Vreeland act, they would be able to meet that situation, and that it would be of great value to them generally if they were informed now of the department's attitude.

Colonel Roosevelt will make a trip to South America and deliver a lecture in Buenos Ayres.

Governor Morehead of Nebraska has appointed a tax commission whose business it will be to investigate the tax systems of other states and make recommendation for a tax system for Nebraska. The commission is as follows:

- Prof. George O. Virtue of Lincoln, a member of the university faculty.
- J. H. Grosvenor, of Aurora, an attorney.
- C. A. Schaepel of Pawnee City, county treasurer.
- C. W. Sears of Omaha, an attorney.
- E. B. Gaddis of Lincoln, a newspaper man.

Jane Addams has already been proposed as a candidate for mayor of Chicago.

The Huerta government in Mexico has chosen a new cabinet.

The Illinois legislature has passed a bill giving to women who are citizens, 21 years old, and have resided in the state one year, in the county ninety days and in the election precinct thirty days, the right to vote for all offices created by statute since the constitution of 1870 was adopted. A constitutional amendment will be necessary before women can be given the right to vote for state officers, members of the legislature and county officers. The possibilities under the bill are tremendous. Women will be able to vote for aldermen in the city of Chicago next spring and for the mayor of Chicago in 1915. No one can forecast the result at the mayoralty election.

MAN'S REDEMPTION

From the El Paso (Texas) Times: Rev. Henry Easter, rector of the Church of St. Clement, speaking on the subject, "The Transforming Love of God," text, 1 Cor. 2:15, said:

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

Nothing but the thorough conviction of the absolute truthfulness of the story of man's redemption can beget us that love toward God which alone can change our lives. Unless a man believes fully and firmly in the literal truth that God was made man, and died upon the cross for our redemption; that He rose again for our justification, and ascended into heaven, there is small hope of his salvation, because there is no hope of his affection being fixed upon a being whom he regards either as a cold abstraction, or an impersonal collection of perfect attributes. Nature may reveal to us a God of wisdom and power, but Christ only has revealed the tenderness of our heavenly Father. Conscience may show us the path of duty, but conscience is powerless to control until we love him who first loved us. It may be aesthetically correct, but I am sorry for the man who has to preach a Christless gospel. Against all forms of infidelity there is but one bulwark, and that is the plain and pointed assertion of the scriptural doctrine that that of Jesus Christ there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved. If you believe what the Bible tells us of the history and doctrine of Jesus; his miraculous birth, his sorrowing and laborious life, his painful death, his resurrection and ascension, and the views which he himself took of these events, to be literally true, you can not help seeing that the possibility of man's salvation is narrowed down to the one way of faith. The Bible without the abatement of one fact, or one precept, with all its sublime mysteries and simple histories, stands today more firmly rooted than ever in the confidence and affections, not only of the ignorant and credulous, but of the wise and learned. The story is two thousand years old, yet it has lost none of its freshness or its meaning. What human story could thus have borne repetition without weariness? Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

This WHITE COMBINATION CAR Will Pay You Back $2250

Whether you own a Car or not—this is the Motor Car you have always wanted—the Car that would do your work as well as your play—the Car that would last for years.

The work and play this car will return to you is about equalled by four low priced touring cars. That would mean an investment of between $4000 and $4500, as against $2250 for the White Combination. Any one of the four would cost more to run and repair than the one White, and would have to be replaced three or four times over before the White really began to wear.

That is why this White Combination Car at $2250 is the best motor car investment you can make. Let us send you specifications and tell you what the Car has done. Are you ready to discuss the matter?

THE WHITE COMPANY 840 D East 79th St., Cleveland, O.

$5,200,000

The above figures represent the amount of insurance in force in The Midwest Life.

There are now about 3,500 policyholders in this company, and the number is steadily increasing each month.

The Midwest Life is a Nebraska company, managed and controlled by Nebraska men.

If you are in the market for life insurance of any kind, or if you wish to sell life insurance, call or write

The Midwest Life

H. Z. SNELL, President A NEBRASKA COMPANY First National Bank Building Lincoln, Neb

Law Should Stop Sale of Leg-Strap and Spring Trusses

Wrong to Buy Anything for Rupture Without Getting 60 Days Trial

Depending on leg-strap or spring trusses—like shown below—is little less than slow suicide. They are almost sure to shorten your life. It's next to impossible to make them hold without hurting.—They are simply a curse to wear.

Away With Leg-Strap and Spring Trusses So far as we know, our guaranteed rupture holder is the only thing of any kind for rupture that you can get on 60 days trial—the only thing we know of good enough to stand such a long and thorough test. It's the famous Cluthe's Automatic Massaging Truss—made on an absolute new principle—has 18 patented features. Self-adjusting. Does away with the misery of wearing belts, leg-strap and springs. Guaranteed to hold at all times—including when you are working, taking a bath, etc. Has cured in case after case that seemed hopeless. Write for Free Book of Advice—Cloth-bound, 164 pages. Explains the dangers of operation. Shows just what's wrong with elastic and spring trusses, and why drugstores should no more be allowed to fit trusses than to perform operations. Exposes the humbug—shows how old-fashioned worthless trusses are sold under false and misleading names. Tells all about the care and attention we give you. Endorsements from over 5000 people, including physicians. Write to-day—find out how you can prove every word we say by making a 60 day test without risking a penny. Box 771—Cluthe Co., 125 E.23rd St., New York City