

Former Husker . . .

Prior to Marsh's two year career at Manhattan, the 6-foot-3, 185-lb. guard played during the summer in New York's city league where such NBA stars as Wilt Chamberlain, Nate Archibald and Connie Hawkins performed. Marsh played in the city league since the age of 13.

"I played a lot of summer ball," Marsh said. "Everybody is good in city league. They're mostly pick-up games and not as organized as college or pro ball."

Manhattan Coach Powers said he tried to recruit Marsh but Marsh was set on Nebraska.

"I tried to talk him out of it but he was decided on Nebraska, I wished him the best of luck," Powers said.

But when Marsh left UNL, Powers convinced Marsh to play for Manhattan, which is a member of the Metro Conference in New York City. Marsh's leadership and ability impressed Golden State scouts, Powers said.

"The situation here was that he was running our ball club," Powers said of Marsh. "He had tremendous leadership capabilities and was very coachable besides his ability. That's why Golden State drafted him."

Marsh led Manhattan to victories over national powerhouses, South Carolina and St. Johns last year while Manhattan also played against Big Ten power, Purdue, in the finals of the Holiday Tournament at Madison Square Garden.

According to Powers, Marsh was lucky Golden State drafted him instead of the New York Knicks, another NBA club.

"I told Ricky that he was lucky because he has a better chance at Golden State," Powers said. "The Knicks usually draft a local boy and if they would've, Ricky would've had to compete with Earl Monroe, Jim Clemons, and rookie Ray Williams."

Marsh said his future looks bright and Powers agrees.

"I talked to Ricky last week," he said, "and Golden State plans on keeping him despite the new 11 man limit. If he gets the opportunity to play, the quality is there to run and play basketball. Ricky can analyze the game, too."

Scholarship limitations...

Romjue was one coach who said the new limits would not help equalize things much in his sport. The limit on golf scholarships is five, but he said there are only five on a golf team anyway.

"Two years ago, Oklahoma State had 15 golfers better than any we had here," he said. "Now they only have seven, but they're still better."

Devaney said the amount of money he gives to each sport depends on how many people are participating in that sport and how much income it produces. But he said each sport is getting its fair share.

"If they don't win the championships, it's not because they don't get the money," he said.
