

Victory a must for women cagers

The UNL women's basketball team must win the game against the University of Nebraska at Omaha Saturday if it wants to play in the regional tournament.

The Huskers forced the teams' third meeting with a 65-48 win over UNO last Wednesday in Lincoln. UNL coach George Stryker said the teams decided before the season started to have a play-off to determine who will attend the regional competition if they split their regular season games. In January the Mavericks won the first contest in Omaha, 65-48.

Stryker said the deciding game will be played in the UNO fieldhouse at 5:15 p.m. because UNO won a coin toss.

The Huskers enter the game with a two-game winning streak. UNL beat Iowa State University Tuesday, 65-57. Linda Janssen scored 21 points against ISU, raising the Husker's record to 4-1 in the last two weeks and 11-17 overall.

Both Janssen and Stryker said the 11-17 record is not a good indicator of the team's quality.

"We lost some we should have won," Janssen said. "The talent is there. We were not aggressive, so we lost a lot of games."

She said since Stryker took over for Marcia Walker, who resigned Jan. 17, the Huskers have become "more organized. We have more confidence in what we are doing."

Stryker said UNL's win over ISU boosted the women's confidence.

"That win had a very positive effect because ISU had beaten us here," he said. "It gave us confidence that we could beat a team that had beaten us here. I'm very positive about the UNO game."

"We are going to give it all we've got. Fan support to try and turn it over to our home court would help. "It is more than the players and the coach. We need the whole school behind us," Stryker said.
