

Students contribute $7,000 to PACE

UNL students contributed over $7,000 to the Program for Active Commitment to Education last year, according to the UNL Bursar's records.

PACE is a scholarship program, which is voluntarily funded by students, who indicated a contribution on semester tuition statements. By marking the PACE box on the statement, students automatically give $3.50 to the program.

According to last year's records, $3,818.50 was contributed to the program during the 1978 fall semester and $3,188.50 was donated during the 1979 spring semester. During the fall semester 1,091 students contributed and 911 donated money during the spring semester.

PACE began in the early 1970s, when ASUN proposed the program to the Board of Regents in January 1971, according to Debra Knight, assistant director of the UNL Office of Scholarships and Financial Aids. The program was designed to assist the financial aid program, she said.

Knight called the PACE scholarships "need-based awards." The financial aids office determines award recipients based on federal low-income guidelines, she said.

During the fall semester 1978, the financial aids office awarded 77 students with PACE awards, totaling $6,125. The average individual award was $100 to $250, she said.

The financial aids office spent more than the amount of contributions because the office "over projected" student contributions, she said.
