

Men's crew team starts preparation for spring season

By Inta Kiziji

Despite the cold weather, the men's crew team has been practicing in full force. Coach Matt Kush said that the team is on a daily land training program which runs six days a week.

There are three different workouts that are done on alternating days, he said. They include track, rowing in the tank and circuit weightlifting followed by long distance running. Kush said the weather will determine when the team will start rowing in the lake, but added that it probably won't be until after the spring break.

The crew is preparing for the Dust Bowl Regatta on March 28 in Oklahoma City which will be the team's first event this season.

Looking ahead in the season, Kush said the team's main event will be Midwest Championship Sprints on April 25 in Madison, Wis. He said the team will go to Austin, Texas during spring break for training.

Kush cited Wisconsin, Notre Dame, Purdue, and Wichita State as the tougher opponents this season. "We're very optimistic" about the upcoming season, Kush said. "Everyone has been working real hard."

"Rowing is a lot like track and field," he said. "You train hard, but you don't know where you stand until you compete."

According to Kush, the real measurement of how good the team is will come from the competition against Wichita State and Notre Dame on April 4.

The women's crew team will be traveling and competing with the men's team in all of the events.
