

Police Report

A white male was reported trespassing in the six floor women's restroom of Smith Hall Monday at 12:38 p.m., according to police reports.

The suspect is described by one witness as being a white male, about 5-8 to 5-9 with a medium build and a dark mustache. He was reportedly wearing a blue baseball cap, blue nylon running shorts, white socks and tennis shoes. He carried a blue and white towel over his shoulder. The suspect is reported to be 20 to 22 years of age.

Second witness reports seeing the suspect peeking in the restroom door as the witness walked down the hall.

Because males are admitted on all Smith Hall floors except the eighth floor from noon to 2 a.m., the suspect could not be charged with violating floor hours.

Officer Bob Fey of the UNL police department said the suspect could, however, be charged with trespassing.

Fey said anyone with information about the suspect should call the department at 472-3555.

The following incidents also were reported to the UNL police between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday:

8:45 a.m. — Sky-blue Bianchi ten-speed bicycle reported stolen from a bike rack near Sandoz Hall. It was estimated to be worth $210.

8:49 a.m. — Table reported stolen from Abel-Sandoz residence halls' snack bar between Friday and Monday. Estimated loss is $75.

Krivosha . . .

A written brief of a case is usually presented to the court before it comes to trial, to inform the justices of the issue to be decided. Krivosha said that he reads 100 briefs every month, 11 months of the year. Words paint pictures and this must be done quickly and properly or the idea will be lost, Krivosha said.

An oral argument follows in the courtroom after the brief has been read. These are usually presented to answer questions that weren't addressed in the brief. Krivosha said that if the court attacks a weak point in the case, a trial lawyer should acknowledge the weakness, but not attempt to defend the impossible. The most effective oral presentations are those that are limited to key issues, he said.
