

Traffic plan...

City transportation officials studied nearby streets and offered five plans to the university. None were accepted.

All of the city proposals would keep arterial traffic between 17th and 19th streets, Selvia said. The plans won't work, Coffey said, because the proposed routes would hinder university expansion.

Bound on the north side by railroads, the west by Interstate 80 and the south by downtown businesses, City Campus can grow only to the east, Coffey said.

Arteries on 18th and 19th streets would prevent future construction of residence halls, recreation facilities and parking lots, he said.

"In the future, we would have the same problem we have now on 16th and 17th," Coffey said.

But moving traffic to 22nd and 23rd streets would divide the Malone neighborhood and split the Malone Community Center, 2040 U St., from the rest of the neighborhood, Selvia said.

Coffey said, however, that busy streets pose a more serious problem on campus.

"Which should we divide, considering the numbers of students that have to cross those streets?"

Much of the residential area on 22nd and 23rd streets is undeveloped, Coffey said. And it isn't likely to grow because most of the vacant lots are less than 50 feet wide, he said. The city required a 50-foot frontage for new homes, he said.

Since no new route has been determined, 16th and 17th streets will remain open while city and university officials work together on a long-range plan. UNL planners will look at future expansion, Coffey said. Then, city transportation officials will work again on traffic planning.

duled for Sunday in the state capitol rotunda. The annual event will begin at 2:30 p.m. and includes special music, seasonal greetings from Gov. Bob Kerrey and the lighting of the tree.

Immediately following the governor's message, he will ask two children from the audience to turn the switch and light the tree.

The annual Channuka Dinner will be Sunday at 6 p.m. in the South Street Temple.

Those wishing to attend should write Jenni Satori, 2838 Sheridan St. in Lincoln. Prices are $4.50 for adults, and $3 for children under 12.

Blom resigns; Health Center seeks director

The director of the University Health Center has resigned and will be replaced by an acting administrator effective Jan. 1, 1985.

Stephen Blom, who has been associated with the health center since February 1979, will become the executive director of the American College Health Association, based in the Washington area.

Gerald Fleischli, medical director of the health center, will assume the duties of acting administrator at the beginning of the year. He also will keep his current position.

According to Richard Armstrong, vice chancellor of student affairs, Blom's contributions to the university were many.

He helped the health center project itself across the campus, Armstrong said, and spread its influence and service.

Blom was instrumental in establishing Wellness Week at UNL and reorganizing the business aspects of the health center, Armstrong said.

The new position is a "record of his professional expertise that he gave his office," Armstrong said. "It is a career advancement."
