NU players eligible

NCAA takes away complimentary tickets

By Bob Asmussen
Night News Editor

The NCAA Council Subcommittee on Eligibility Appeals Tuesday restored eligibility for 60 Nebraska players who had been suspended last week for at least one game. The suspensions were the result of the players' misuse of complimentary game tickets.

The subcommittee ruled that the guilty Nebraska players will lose their pass-gate tickets this season.

The subcommittee also said all NCAA Division I football and men's and women's basketball programs will be asked to review their athlete's use of pass-lists for the 1985-86 school year.

"Obviously, we're very pleased, very relieved," Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said Tuesday night. "We think it was an equitable solution."

Osborne said the loss of pass-gate privileges will be hard on some of the players.

"Most players that I've talked to would rather play than have passes," Osborne said.

Osborne said he was happy with the hearing and said he thought the university was dealt with fairly.

"I was very pleased with the appeal process," Osborne said. "We felt that at least heard everything we said."

Osborne said the decision by the subcommittee will have ramifications on other institutions.

"I really think it will be good for college athletics in that matters of ethical conduct will be put mainly in the province of the institution."

Osborne said he agreed with the NCAA decision that there was ethical misconduct in the use of the tickets.

"We just disagreed with the severity of the penalty," he said.

Nebraska linebacker Kevin Parsons said Tuesday night that the decision was a good one for the team. He said not having pass-gate privileges the rest of the season will be difficult for him.

"My dad's not happy that he might not get to watch me play this year," Parsons said.

Parsons said he was anxious on Tuesday while awaiting the subcommittee's decision.

"You never know what the NCAA is going to do," Parsons said. "It's kind of like giving a child a loaded revolver."

Parsons said he thought the suspensions were too severe of a penalty.

"I don't think that they (the NCAA) had any right to say I could or could not have people watch me play football. Parsons said that if the subcommittee had not come back with a favorable ruling Tuesday, some of the affected Nebraska players would have filed suit against the NCAA.

"I think there would have been guys filing suits, definitely," Parsons said. "I know I wanted to do it. We weren't given the right to refrain from self-incrimination. I would have refused to answer their questions."

Federal legislation reduces student aid

By Shawn Hubbell

Due to a federal government plan to save money, students will find that their Guaranteed Student Loans this semester are only half of what they expected.

On April 7, President Reagan signed reconciliation legislation which allows for changes of certain laws to meet demands set by the budget process. One of the changes agreed to in this legislation was the multiple disbursement of GSLs.

Pappas, Labeledz arraigned

LINCOLN (AP) — State Sens. James Pappas of North Platte and Bernice Labeledz of Omaha were arraigned Tuesday on felony charges connected with a failed lottery petition drive.

Lancaster County Judge Gail Pokorny scheduled a Sept. 25 preliminary hearing for Labeledz and a Sept. 26 hearing for Pappas.

Arraignments on felony charges also were held for lobbyists Walter Radcliffe of Lincoln and Marleen "Mardy" McCullough of Grant, who was a coordinator for the petition drive.

Radcliffe pleaded innocent to misdemeanor charges of illegally spending more than $50 in cash and failing to report the expenditure in violation of the state's accountability law.

At their preliminary hearings, attorneys for Pappas and Labeledz can move to dismiss the charges. Each lawmaker would have to be bound over to district court before entering a plea.

As he left the courthouse, Pappas shook his head to indicate "no" when asked if he was considering resigning from the Legislature. All four defendants remained free on personal recognizance bond.

Charges were filed against the defendants Monday in Lancaster County. Also charged in Lancaster County was Marc Fellman of Fort Calhoun, an officer of Lottery Consultants of Nebraska.

Two Omaha men have been charged in Sarpy County in connection with the case. William Katzman and Joseph A. Monastero, officers in Lottery Consultants, were charged with five counts of falsely swearing on an initiative petition.

On Monday, Pappas was charged in Lincoln County Court at North Platte with two felony counts of falsely swearing to the signature of a circulator, County Attorney Charles Kandt said.

Bill Hord of North Platte, who is running against Pappas for the 42nd District seat in the Legislature, said his campaign plans will not change because of charges against Pappas.

"We will deal with the issues. The indictment will be a matter to be worked out in the courts," Hord said.

Labeledz is not up for re-election this year.

Radcliffe said in a written statement that he is innocent of any crime and intends to fight the charges.

"I do want it known that I have cooperated voluntarily with the investigative authorities and, subject only to restrictions on attorney-client privileged matters, have answered every question and every area of inquiry put to me," he said.

Sen. John DeCamp of Neligh, who was a member of the Nebraska Taxpayers Lottery Committee, said the charges are ridiculous.

"The state has just gone mad," he said. DeCamp has not been accused of any wrongdoing in the lottery case.

DeCamp, a longtime lottery supporter, accused Attorney General Robert Spire and Heavican of "using this issue, in the most flagrant and ridiculous way, for their own political purposes."

"Bob Spire is a weak attorney general and everybody knows it," DeCamp said. "He hopes this will help him politically."

DeCamp and Labeledz have filed a suit contending that the laws governing the lottery process are unconstitutional. DeCamp said he filed the suit because Pappas and Labeledz are his good friends.

Special salary increase tabled by Faculty Senate

By Michael Hooper
Senior Reporter

The UNL Faculty Senate voted Tuesday to table a motion that would oppose any proposal for a special 10 percent salary increase for 25 percent of UNL faculty.

The motion is in response to the NU Board of Regents decision to seek additional funds for 25 percent of UNL faculty. The funds would be in the sum of 10 percent of total faculty salaries and would be awarded to faculty deemed outstanding.

UNL Professor of History John Braeman, who recommended the motion, called the Regent's proposal "an unjust and invidious reflection upon the majority of this faculty."

"To declare three-fourths of the faculty shall be deemed expendable will undercut, rather than promote efforts to obtain adequate funding for this institution," Braeman said.

Braeman's motion may come up for discussion at the Senate's next meeting.

Also at the meeting, Gerry Meisels, College of Arts and Sciences Dean, told the Faculty Senate that general liberal education at UNL needs modifying.

Referring to a report made by the Chancellor's Commission on General Education, Meisels said general education should be taught recognizing students' level of preparation and stage of intellectual development.

The Chancellor's Commission on General Education's report is currently a proposal, on which the Faculty Senate will make recommendations.
