Theater runs diverse films

By ALEXIS THOMAS
A&E Editor

If film is to be viewed as art, as the director of the Mary Riepma Ross Theater thinks it should be, this semester's lineup should be an art exhibit extravaganza.

"We have just a really good and diverse selection of the best films in current release," director Danny Lee Ladely said. "It should be a mixture of education and entertainment."

The Ross is found inside the Sheldon Memorial Art Gallery. Art houses are usually the place to find underground movies; but because Lincoln doesn't have any art houses, the Ross picks up the slack.

This allows the theater to fill a niche with films that otherwise wouldn't run in Lincoln. These include first-run foreign films, documentaries, experimental films, the classics and imported films.

But don't let the lack of blockbusters scare you away. Ladely said the movies offered this semester should appeal to a wide audience.

A good example is the movie "Welcome to the Dollhouse," which opens Tuesday, starting the season. The film won the Best Picture Award at this year's Sundance Film Festival, one of the country's most prestigious film awards.

Billed as a dark comedy, it documents adolescent hell in suburban New Jersey. The main character, Dawn Wiener, sounds like a close cousin to Jan Brady — without the bell-bottoms or the happy Brady ending.

Although the cartoon trailer at most movie theaters is dead, Ladely is determined to keep it alive. "The Abductees," an 11-minute cartoon to run before "Welcome to the Dollhouse," describes an alien encounter. "How to Make Love to a Woman," a five-minute animation, will run before "The Young Poisoner's Handbook," which will be shown Sept. 12 through Sept. 21.

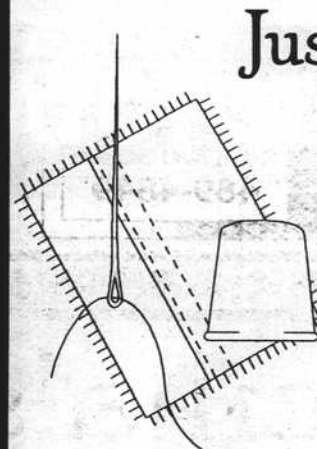

While Hollywood is abuzz with talk of Matthew McConaughey, best known for his work in "Dazed and Confused" and, more recently, John Grisham's "A Time to Kill," the Ross will show this actor's latest work in January. "Lone Star," a murder mystery reminiscent of the old west, will run Jan. 2 through Jan. 12.

Wrapping up the season, two films by Barbara Hammer address the lesbian and gay community. "Nitrate Kisses," a documentary, follows the relationships between four gay and lesbian couples. "Tender Fictions," an autobiography, describes Hammer's sexual and political maturation from childhood to adulthood.

Get off it. Exercise.
