Local concert to benefit KRNU

at all. The only place to hear local music by local musicians is on KRNU."

The appreciation by many local bands regarding KRNU's willingness to exhibit local talent precipitated the benefit concert. But it was Duffy's booking agent, Andy Fairbairn, who brought the project together. Fairbairn is also a former KRNU music director.

"Duffy's is very supportive of KRNU—they help us out, and we help them out," he said. "We are definitely willing to do it more often, once a semester if they want."

Fairbairn also said all-ages shows were not commonplace because of lackluster turnout and a minimal return on sales.

"Duffy's is very supportive of KRNU — they help us out, and we help them out."

"People don't make money at the door, they make it from the bar," he said. "You can't even pay the electric bill from what you make at the door."

The $4 cover charge for Sunday's concert will pay Duffy's sound man, with the rest of the proceeds turned over to KRNU on behalf of Duffy's, the bands and supporters of local music.

"We'll do all we can to support their cause and keep KRNU alive," Young said. "They are always willing to support anyone who is putting out music of any kind."

Sunday's show is expected to last from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. The concert is open to all ages and the cover charge is $4.

Bobby McFerrin gives vivacious vocal concert the first time. The entire concert was made from improvisation, and when McFerrin liked what he heard, his body and face showed it.

Along with the look of a little boy, he was also the teacher. Starting a song with a rhythm, he would then pass the rhythm onto a member of his group so that he could add another vocal instrument.

McFerrin produced sounds that one would swear was coming from a drum machine. Then the drum machine would switch to a bass guitar that would then switch to a saxophone. But in reality, the only instruments in the house were voices.

During certain times in the evening, McFerrin included the audience. When he found out that the entire first row was made of a youth choir, he asked the choir's teacher to lead them in a song. After the choir finished a line or two of "Lean On Me," McFerrin and Voicestra did their own rendition of the Bill Withers' song to the audience's utmost approval.

Perhaps the best part of the evening was that McFerrin kept the evening fresh and did not pull out any old bones by singing "Don't Worry, Be Happy."
