

THE FRONTIER

SOUTHWESTERN BREEZES

By Romaine Saunders

The evening of August 1st lightning struck down a horse in the pasture across the road, one of Bernard Kennedy's work stock.

The AAA has wrought wonders on the farm. The present day farmer is ten times more efficient than his fathers. Mr. Wallace says so. Just the same, our fathers produced abundance where you can't raise a fuss now and they had no expert advice from Washington nor conservation checks to encourage idleness.

The free-trader used to say the consumer pays the tariff. By the same token the tax payer and not the government is putting up the money for these copious grants of public funds.

The tall grass country captivated the fancy of sister when she was with us several weeks this summer. Her home is in a charming little city in a charming little valley in California. Miss Meals also is familiar with many of the nation's beauty spots, so as she thrilled to the simple pleasures of our prairie dwellers, the glow of sunset, the swaying of the tall cottonwoods' green plumage, a vast landscape spread in summer garb to a far horizon and exclaim: "This is a beautiful country!" I wondered if citizens of our community half understood the beauty, the value, the great opportunities, out here far from the maddening throngs. The water in the tall grass country had a special appeal for Laura. Dwellers in most cities have poor water and dinking from living fountains out this way is to them as sipping nectar of the gods.

Some say it was two inches, others 3. I have no rain gauge, but after nearly two hours rain in this community, not in drops nor slanting lines, as the poets say, but in mighty waves carried before a violent wind which roared out of the north in the early evening of August 2; after two hours, as we started to say, the new mown meadow out across the creek was a lake, two bushels of apples had been shaken from the trees and a winter windbrake at the barn was torn from its moorings. Corn, gardens, flowers, potato vine needing rain and a two or three inch visitation has now supplied that need. There was an attendant loss of young poultry.

The old town undergoes changes. Where the cabin stood from whence that aristocratic and most always sober cowboy, Bob Ingersoll, stole a bride and made off on one of the town's sensational elopements, there is now a thrifty place of business. Where John Horriskey challenged all comers at the handball alley the gap is now closed with an imposing glass front. Where Odie Biglin rang the bell just about every shot at Dave Tierney's shooting gallery there is now no place to hang a target. Where either a fight or foot-race amused the loafers green and red lights now direct traffic. Where Sherd Simmons rode Hay McClure's "Dynamite" you can't find a parking place. Where the arena was in which Col. Doyle layed an imported wrestler low now stands a row of bungalows. Where stood a blacksmith shop in which government agents found the dies of a counterfeiter the county has a building housing school activities. And then a gloomy picture. The corner where Joe Cowperthwaite, Bill Falon, George Bowden, Con Keys and other stock buyers held forth reminded one of the South Omaha stock exchange is now deserted, names carved on the brick wall standing out like the ghosts of a bygone age.

Visits Old Town After Long Absence

Frank O'Connell and his brother, Jerome, of Chicago, arrived in the city last Saturday and put in a couple of days visiting old time friends in this city, while on their way to Denver to visit relatives. The boys were residents of this city in the old "horse and buggy" days leaving here some twenty odd years ago, since which time they have made their home in Colorado and Illinois. Frank said that he was surprised when he drove into this city last Saturday evening and felt that he had got tangled in his directions and was evidently heading into State street in Chicago, instead of the O'Neill that he remembered. "You residents do not know the great change that has taken place in the appearance of the town," said Frank, "you have to be away a few years and then come back to observe the great change in the town." The population of the city has nearly doubled since the boys left and Frank said that out of every ten people he would meet on the street nine of them would be strangers, although for several years he was one of our most prominent business men and knew practically all the residents of the town and the surrounding country.

Holt County Boys Purchase Purebred Rams

On Friday, August 1, Mr. A. L. Mathis, the O'Neill Vocational Agriculture instructor, took Robert Thomas, Estelin Thomas and Francis Luben to Lincoln to the purebred ram sale. The all-day program consisted of a sheep shearing contest, showing and judging rams wool grading and a talk by H. C. Filley on prices.

In the afternoon the purebred rams were auctioned. These boys bid on the rams that they thought were best and the results was that they bought a Hampshire from the Waldo Kruse flock, Florence, Nebraska and Robert Thomas's is from the Fred Feeken flock, Crete, Nebraska. Both of these rams are from very good sires.

This year these boys bought some Colorado western ewes. With the rams they will have better offspring. Francis and Robert are increasing their flock of sheep every year and they have found a need for better sires. If they continue to improve their flocks, they will be able to supply this part of the state with some good sires.

Seek 500 Young Men To Be Trained For Skilled Work

The Norfolk local office of the Nebraska State Employment Service will interview applicants and give tests in connection with an order for aircraft workers to be placed in a west coast defense plant, according to manager Steffen.

"The State Employment Service has an opening order for 500 'Trainers,' that is, men 18 years or over who meet the tests, and also an order for semi-skilled and skilled workers," he said.

In order to qualify for the "Trainer" group, applicants must (1) be 18 or over, (2) pass physical tests, and (3) pass tests to be given by aircraft company representatives indicating mechanical aptitude and general ability.

Men available to take such job if accepted, should inquire at their nearest local office or at one of its itinerant points at once. Actual testing of applicants will be done during the week beginning August 11.

Manager Steffen said young men who have been in defense training courses, NYA training courses, CCC or any other classes may apply. However, it is not necessary to have had training or experience if the tests are successfully passed. The men to be selected in the skilled and semi-skilled group must of course, have experience.

This method of selecting workers is called the "pooled interview," and aids in curbing unnecessary migration to defense sites. "It is our first big opportunity of enabling mechanically inclined youths to do something for defense and to find opportunity for placement without having had previous experience as skilled workers, Manager Steffen said.

Workmen Landscaping Court House Grounds

The grounds of the new court house are being landscaped by the WPA as a project sponsored by the Holt County commissioners. All of the old dirt on the north side where the old court house stood is being removed, and new dirt being hauled in. A well is being dug which will furnish the water required, and more shrubs and a new lawn is to be planted. A new side walk leading to the north, is also to be put in. This improvement is one that has long been needed and will add much to the beauty of the building.

The landscaping project was included in the original project of tearing down the old court house and rebuilding the new annex, but work was delayed, pending the completion of the annex, and until fall to plant the new lawn.

Large delegations of O'Neill people went to Atkinson Monday and Tuesday afternoons and evenings and took in the Atkinson Hay Day celebration being held in that city. If you want to put in a good day come to O'Neill and partake of the entertainment furnished you by the business and professional men of this city.

NOTICE

On account of the shortage of water, residents of the city are earnestly requested to shut off their lawn sprinklers when the fire alarm sounds. This order to be in effect until further notice.
