A SORRY CHAPTER

Secretary Morgenthau at a recent press conference, said that the government was considering a new plan for financing which would centralize all borrowing in its own hands, and such a move, though late, would be very much worth while. If this should go into effect, it would bring about the end of the double budget, and that has been a sorry chapter in the government's financial record of the last few years.

Our financing method hasn't been forthright. It hasn't given the people a clear picture of what has been going on.

In discussing the Morgenthau statement the Baltimore Sun says: "The double budget was set up and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Commodity Credit Corporation, and other agencies of like nature, were authorized to borrow whatever funds they needed independently of the Treasury and to spend without reporting their expenditures through the regular federal accounts. In the 12 months which ended last June, for example, the autonomous corporations borrowed $1,126,000,000 in the open market, which did not count under the debt limit. They spent or obligated this money mostly for defense production, but it did not show under the head of national defense in the Treasury statements, and it did not figure in the deficit."

In short, Treasury statements have not been showing the government's financial status. "By the devious and unnatural process of permitting these public agencies to finance themselves," says the New York Herald Tribune, "nearly $11,000,000,000 in debt has been created which—because it consisted of contingent instead of direct liabilities—was not included in the government debt, and so was not covered by the debt limit provisions of the law." It is to be hoped that Mr. Morgenthau was speaking with the certain knowledge that the change will be made.—Fargo Forum.

POLICY OF SECRECY CAN SERVE TWO ENDS

The proposed expansion of the arms program is to be accompanied according to the President, by an increasing blackout of exact information as to progress in arms productions. Too much information is going out, Mr. Roosevelt observed at his press conference.

Something is to be said for this policy of secrecy, but it is only fair to emphasize the point that secrecy can be used not only to obscure the glasses through which the Germans look but also to cover up deficiencies in the organization of our own defenses. This particular point might be far less important than it is had not the President and his associates so often tried during the past fifteen months to make it appear that defense output was more satisfactory than was actually the case. In view of the way in which the "on-hand-and-on-order" formula has been worked, and also in view of the officials' disparagement of figures prepared by Senator Harry F. Byrd and others who have sought to inform the public of the true state of affairs, a certain skepticism as to the proposed blackout of information is in order.

To the extent that the purpose is to protect the country against Hitler, it is good. But to the extent that it is designed to protect an often ineffectual administration against legitimate domestic criticism it appears in a less agreeable light.—Baltimore, Md., Sun.
