The tactful Colonel Faith, a genial Hoosier who used to be an army educator, will, however, allow a beauty parlor, if not a guardhouse. He says there's no reason why women shouldn't get a hair-do when they need it and there'll be time out for that. But this doesn't mean a soft time for the soldiergirls. There will be seven 45minute classes a day and one 65-minute period of drill.

The women who have qualified for officer's training have been chosen from several thousand applicants. The full complement of the fort eventually will be about 25,000 women. They will serve in kitchen police, as barracks orderlies, clerks and messengers and in many other capacities in which men have been

The tall, lean Colonel Faith, a trall-blazer in this kind of organization, takes his job easily and casually and gives assurance that the women will be inducted smoothly into army routine. While he is friendly and informal in manner, he is known in the army as a careful and competent officer and, while the girls may get their hair-do and all that, there will be no slack administration of the corps.

If the aerial gunners weren't up there doing their job every time one of our bombers goes out over the Libyan desert or China or the Pacific, many of the bombers would fail in their mission and many would never get home."

This came up in connection with talk of this month marking the general's 23rd straight year in the air services of the army, and the fact that operating a fighter or bomber plane is a matter of a complex organization of human and technical factors, undreamed of when the general first went aloft.

"Every bombing mission is a matter of team work," said General Bradley. "It is not by any means just a piloting job. The aerial gunner is a member of the team without whom the mission might fail. So is the bombardier, the navigator, the engineer and everyone else in the crew. The failure of one can mean the destruction of all."

He said he was getting a "splendid type of young men for all these jobs" and stressed his view that the war would be won by "straight shooting with bullets and bombs." WASHINGTON .- Some of the criticism of British generalship-and of certain admirals in our own navyis absolutely just. But it is a good deal simpler to criticize than to find

The statement that General Rommel, were he in the British army, might by now have attained the rank of sergeant, is an argument that, if followed through to its legical conclusion, would lead to some interesting

Certainly it is not true that in the United States navy anyone not a graduate of Annapolis could never hope to be an admiral-nor even a captain. Few men promoted from the enlisted personnel have ever gotten beyond the grade of lieutenant commander-two grades below

Naval officers will explain, when on the defensive, that usually the men are so much older, when, for some demonstrated ability, they reach the commissioned rank, that it is not in the nature of things that they should get very much further up the ladder of promotion before retirement for age.

In the army it is much easier for non-West Point man to get up, especially if he had a good education before entering the service. But most of these cases also will be found not to have resulted from promotions from the enlisted personnel. Usually these men went into the army as commissioned officers because of qualifications suited to the period of induction.

Nazis Do It-We Don't

The real problem comes right down to this-what is there about the German system which makes the development of a Rommel possible, and which makes such a development in either the British or U. S. army and navy almost un-

There is no doubt that there could be some form of liberalization of our promotion systems, and the British, which would result in a substantial improvement. But it is not half as easy as it sounds.

It is so easy to say that men should be promoted by merit rather than seniority. But HOW is that merit to be determined-and by whom? That's where the trouble comes in. The moment we abandon seniority in a democratic form of government, or a country recog-MAJ. GEN. There is a very strong desire on the part of the government to curtail the number of editions put out by newspapers in big cities. Naturally there is considerable fear that Jesus. any attempt to butt into this situation will be resented as an interference with the freedom of the

The fact remains that a reduction in the number of editions would help tremendously in saving rubber.

In most cities where this is important the publishers would love to have some excuse to curtail, always providing of course that their competitive interests are not hurt. Thus if there are two morning newspapers in one city (there are only about eight such cities) both papers would save considerable money if there should be no edition of either until say 10 o'clock at night.

There is another element which makes the whole issue a hot potato. Government interference would be bitterly resented in certain cities where the paper, which might reasonably contend that it was hurt by the restriction, is branded as an anti-administration paper.

But there is another complication both in these cities and in the greater number of cities where there is only one morning newspaper, but keen competition between the morning and afternoon newspapers for circulation and advertising. This is that at present the morning paper gets a certain additional amount of circulation by reason of very early
