SOUTHWESTERN BREEZES

By Romaine Saunders

If you would set a brother straight in his thinking, why allow modesty, moral cowardice or inferiority complex to rob you of the credit thus due you by hiding behind the mystery of an unsigned letter? Heaven help the individual who seeks to promulgate his views on any of the red-hot sticks of dynamite of the day and does not come out in the open. If ever this was a man's world, it is today. If ever you needed two legs to stand on, now is the time. A paragraph in this column relating to a character in India has drawn fire. The one who fired the shot was either ashamed, afraid or too modest to sign his offering, which is scarcely legible, but I make out a collection of statements about India, the British and our American colonial period. The question of independence of India was in no way involved in what I had to say of the jailing of the chief disturber over there and it is unusual, if not wholly unwarranted, to abandon for once the purpose of this column to a lengthy discussion of other peoples' affairs.

A comparison of our colonial history with the situation in India, as touched upon by my anonymous critic, is beside the point. Our forefathers wrought out a new thing among nations by the methods of men and patriots, not the methods of fools.

The chief disturber in India says they will gain independence without violence, and at once violence breaks out on every hand. The Indian could cope with the world as it was 500 years ago, but in this mad hour that enfeebled race would fall a prey to international bandits if left to themselves. Many of their ablest characters recognize this.

A few extracts from the book, "Mother India," by Katherine Helen Parr to Grand Island to-Mayo, will show what the pagan day, from where they left for

Commerce, was in O'Neill Tuesday, August 25, to confer with local business leaders on problems arising out of the war which face iness Wallace explained that perhaps more than with any other single problem the Department of Commerce is concerned with the difficulties confronting small towns. He carefully pointed out the factors which have made it impossible to establish large industrial plants such as airplane plants and tank factories in the small towns of agricultural regions. Among the handicaps which these towns face are inadequate skilled labor, inadequate housing, transportation and power facilities, and remoteness from sources of raw material and complementary industries. The great contribution which these communities are making to the winning of the war is in their normal business of agricultural production.

Among the efforts which the Department of Commerce has made to help small towns is the "Small Town Manual." This is a book containing a great many suggestions for co-operative community action. The "Manual" shows how the small town can help win the war and at the same time help itself by making the town a better place in which to
