Every new tax bill involves more administrative costs and additional employees. Hundreds of carloads of paper will be required for printing the millions of new bank forms, while as much more will be needed for the central and field offices of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The Victory tax also is going to increase considerably the number of bookkeepers in the offices of larger business firms to keep track of deductions from wages and salaries. Incidentally, government employees, now numbering over two million, will pay in their monthly amounts and all government agencies and departments will have their clerical forces working over-time on the deduction program. The War Department civilian staff now numbers over one million employees, including the workers at Army camps, bases and projects.

A Washington conference has been called to discuss a draft of "manpower" for industry. Donald Nelson says that over onethird of our working population will be doing some form of war work in 1943. The growth of war industries and that of the Army and Navy has reached a point where some organization of manpower is deemed necessary pro-duction accordingly.
