Views of Congress

By Dr. A. L. Miller, M. C.

Excerpts from a letter just received from Ovid Butler, executive secretary of the American Forestry Association, carries some other interesting facts about J. Sterling Morton. Mr. Butler writes: "With very great interest I have read in the April 22 Congressional Record your fine tribute to J. Sterling Morton, founder of Arbor Day. In your remarks I notice you refer to two trees planted in his honor and memory here in the national capital. You may be interested to know that there are two more memorial trees planted and growing here in honor of the great Nebraskan. They are American black walnuts, and one is planted on the capitol grounds; the other in the National Historical Grove, Anacostia, on the banks of the Potomac. Both antedate the plantings you spoke of."

With the letter he enclosed an advance proof of the May, 1943, issue of the American Forests, which carries some additional interesting information about the founding of Arbor Day. It reads: "Mr. Morton first propounded his idea at a meeting of the Nebraska Board of Agriculture on January 4, 1872. He probably never expected it to spread to far corners of the union, and to some foreign countries. At the time, he was thinking mainly of his own treeless state of Nebraska in which he had been a ceaseless and indefatigable advocate of the planting of fruit and shade trees. He himself wrote the resolution which was unanimously adopted by the Board, naming the date of April 10 to be 'especially' set apart and consecrated for tree planting in the state of Nebraska."

Arbor Day was later changed to April 22, the birthday of its founder. The article goes on to say: "On that day, (April 10, 1872) there appeared in the Omaha Daily Herald a brief article written by Mr. Morton in appreciation of trees. One paragraph read: 'A collection of inanimate marbles may, for a few years, preserve the name, and entry, and exit on this stage in life's short play. But how much more enduring are the animate trees of our own planting. They grow and self-perpetuate themselves, and shed yearly blessings on our race. Trees are monuments I would have and in their yearly tribute of emerald foliage, variegated flowers and blushing fruit, I would find my most acceptable panegyric.'

"This year J. Sterling Morton's wish for trees for his monument has been fulfilled in a form that would have given him everlasting joy and pride could he have lived to bear it witness. The Save-the-Redwoods League has announced that a stately grove of redwoods in northwestern California has been set apart to be preserved in honor of the founder of Arbor Day. Known as the Morton Memorial Redwood Grove, it is in Humboldt Redwood State Park in the area of the Avenue of Giants."

Some encouraging thoughts for those who fear that we may be in for a serious depression when this war ends are furnished by the Second Progress Report on the Consumer Phase of a Survey to Determine Postwar Needs recently made by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. The survey covers the period through 1942. It says in part: "If the war were to end tomorrow, 53% of U. S. families believe they would make purchases of one or more major articles within six months. The immediate postwar market was estimated at $2,331,000,000 for 2,950,000 automobiles; $860,185,000 for major household electrical appliances (radios, washing machines, refrigerators, etc.) and $709,905,000 for furniture.

"One million, fifteen thousand families intend to build or buy a new home, indicating the possibilities of a postwar building boom of at least $5,000,000,000. Thirty-four per cent of all home owners indicated they would make some repairs of their properties. In addition to improving their homes, 58% of farmers who own their own farms intend to make farm improvements to the extent of $6,000,000,000.

"Despite the evidence that many people intend to make immediate major postwar purchases, most people are not counting on buying these things for cash. And as consumers debts are being reduced because of shortages and restrictions, installment buying will continue to be a major factor in large consumer purchases."

Miss Mary Ryan returned to her home in Sioux City on Tuesday, after visiting her brother, J. B. Ryan and other relatives here over the week-end.

Judge D. R. Mounts and Court Reported Ted McElhaney held court in Butte on Monday.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"Quite a stack of newspapers I left you yesterday, Judge. Aren't goin' in the newspaper business, are you?"
"No, I just enjoy reading different papers so my nephew George sends them to me whenever he takes a business trip. I got a big kick out of some he sent me from several counties where they still have prohibition. Particularly from some headlines that read 'Drunk Driving Arrests Rise'.

"Bootleggers must post Ceiling Prices', 'Federal Agents seize 'Trick' Liquor Truck'. Doesn't that go to prove, Joe, that prohibition does not prohibit?"
"I watched conditions pretty carefully during our 13 years of prohibition in this country. The only thing I could see we got out of it was bootleg liquor instead of legal liquor... plus the worst crime and corruption this country has ever known."
