

It May Be Urgent

When your Children Cry for It

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it; some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

The Very Best Time

To take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is now. This herbal alternative extract makes the blood redder—improves and repairs your system, rouses organs into healthy action and builds up needed flesh and strength. Read this: Mrs. T. Wise of 4509 Boothe Ave., Rosedale, Kans., writes: "I had dizzy spells, and was so deathly sick at my stomach I couldn't ride on a street car, nor be where it was warm. We had a Medical Adviser about 10 years ago or more. After trying about ten doctors, I read that book and found I had catarrh of the stomach. I got two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery but with only half a bottle the sickness at my stomach was all gone."

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid (like Phillips Milk of Magnesia) soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Out Our Way

HOUR DOESN'T WORRY G. K. C.

Chesterton Has Never Replaced Watch Stolen in 1900

William Lyon Phelps in Scribner's Magazine.

Mr. and Mrs. Chesterton live in an old Tudor farmhouse in Beaconsfield, to which they have made additions in harmony with the original design. They have a lovely garden, and the whole place makes an ideal setting for persons who are so thoroughly and traditionally English.

Mr. Chesterton is one of the busiest men in the world and never seems to be in a hurry. In the year 1900, while making a speech, the mob got excited and somebody stole his watch. He has never carried one since.

"Why, how do you manage without one?"

He laughed. "Oh, it doesn't really make any particular difference what time it is, and if I really want to know I ask."

In addition to his poems, novels, religious works, essays, biographies and whatnots, he is the editor of G. K.'s Weekly, which must be a worse burden than the Old Man of the Sea. But its object is to promulgate ideas in which he believes, and he, like most men of the Anglo-Saxon race, has an active conscience.

When he was taken to see the Great White Way in New York he made a remark that ought to live forever. He looked up at the amazing illumination and said: "What a place this would be for a man who could not read!"

I asked him what impressed him at first as the chief difference between the aspect of England and America. He said: "Your wooden houses."

I had never thought there was anything unusual about wooden houses, because we take them for granted. But a wooden house in England is a very rare spectacle. It seems incredible that there can be enough stone in that small island to supply the demand. As for brick, you will see plenty of brick making from railway carriage windows.

Fewer Pleas of Guilty From New York World

Lawyers consulted by the Sunday World with reference to the effect which the Jones case is likely to have on prohibition enforcement agreed that at least one possibility is a sharp diminution in the pleas of guilty which have been a prominent feature of enforcement in the past. And certainly this seems probable. Unless district attorneys agree to pleas of guilty on misdemeanor charges, with assurance of leniency, in which case they have virtually repudiated the law themselves, it is hard to see how defendants can be expected to do anything but demand jury trials and fight their cases. To plead guilty to a felony is a pretty serious matter, even if sentence is suspended entirely, and particularly serious for bootleggers, a many of them are forefathers, and to enter such a plea would render them subject to deportation.

But this possibility of a trial for every case, quite aside from the question of whether juries would convict, raises a set of difficulties all its own. Hitherto prohibition cases have been handled by having bootleggers march up and plead guilty in wholesale lots; 7,811 out of 8,731 of them were disposed of in that manner last year, and that is the only way the federal court calendars were kept reasonably clear. But with a trial demanded in every case? The present court

Rare, in Fact. From Kansas City Star. "You say he is a strange husband?" "I'll say he is!" "What's so strange about him?" "Why, they have been married 10 years and he still thinks his wife isn't able to put on her own overshoes or even find a chair for herself when she comes into the room."

machinery could not possibly be equal to such a demand. When Emory R. Buckner was district attorney, it will be recalled, he estimated that if jury trials were demanded in all cases 83 more courts would be needed in New York alone. Under present conditions, according to H. L. McBain, professor of public law at Columbia university, "violators of the law would live and die before their cases would be brought to trial." Penckton Howard, lecturer on criminal law in the same university, says that to "rout jury trials the present court machinery must be increased 'a hundredfold,' and reminds us that "it is futile to panic; a law designating drastic penalties without providing court machinery to carry out the law."

Thus having dodged the devil, we find ourselves in the deep blue sea. We tried asking the bootleggers to step forward and pay their licenses, and that didn't work because licenses after all are licenses. Now, if our district attorneys use the means provided by congress, we are going to try really punishing the bootleggers. And that will not work, as the bootleggers naturally will object; and we have not the court machinery to overcome their objections. So we are back where we were a month ago, a year ago, five years ago; prohibition, if it is possible at all, is possible only at cost. And we still have to make up our minds whether we are willing to foot the cost.

His Father's Hate.

From Manchester (Eng.) Guardian. Frederick the Great is one of the most tragic figures of history. In childhood he was tortured mentally and physically by his father, who though he alternated religious melancholia with bovine sensuality, was at all times constant in his hatred of his children. Because his son loathed the coarseness of his father's friends, the rough manners of his soldiers, and the tedious meanderings of his Lutheran pastors he was bitterly persecuted. But persecution could not dim his mind, while his charm won him many friends, who risked much to get him books, music or money. Chief among them was Hans Hermann von Katte, whom Frederick William caused to be executed in Frederick's presence because he had helped in the young man's attempt to escape from Prussia. The horror of the scene was increased by the fact that the plot had failed largely through Frederick's mismanagement.

Frederick never recovered from the blow. His power of direct response to love and affection withered, though all through life he tortured himself by his passionate desire for them. So he became the suspicious and mean character of the history books. Eventually he had no object in life but to revenge himself on his father by beating him at his own game of militarism. This is the secret of Frederick's career, but its tragedy lies in the fact that the mind which Voltaire could accept as an equal's was never blind to the deterioration of character. As Mrs. Goldsmith says, "he was an egotist without vanity."

Edgar Not a Poet.

From Washington Post. Representative Howard, of Nebraska, has set a precedent which, if followed by all members, might seriously interfere with the output of the House. At the recent session Mr. Howard rose to what he termed a "question of personal privilege," and eloquently confessed himself undecorating of honors that had been accorded by several of his colleagues. In congratulating him upon the authorship of a poem that had been published in the Congressional Record at his request, he hastened to explain to the House that the verse, which proposed reunion among the survivors of the armies of the Blue and Gray, was written by a Mr. Carlisle, of Washington, and that through the accidental elimination of the by-line in the printing office, credit was not given to the author. "The lines are beautiful," said Mr. Howard. "The sentiment is noble, and I should like ever so much, Speaker, if I might claim the authorship of those lines. But they were not mine; I did not intend to deceive; I did not intend to commit the hideous crime of plagiarism."

If every one of the 435 members of the House were to arise and apologize so eloquently for every bit of anonymous genius that passes into the Record as original, certainly the time left for deliberation on national problems might be seriously reduced. Nevertheless Mr. Howard is deserving of the applause he received. Such an example to congress should not fail to attract public attention. Congress needs more statesmen like Representative Howard.

A Burglar's Double
Eleven years ago an Atlantic City man was arrested mistakenly for Howard H. France, a notorious burglar. Police apologized and explained to the man he was an exact double of France. Since then the same man has been arrested nine more times for the same burglar. After the third arrest the victim of this mistaken identity demanded a letter from police which they issued, stating: "This man is not Howard H. France." He now carries his letter wherever he goes.—Capper's Weekly.

YOU CAN'T DYE with Good Intentions

You can get results—after a fashion—with any old dye; but to do work you are proud of takes real anilines. That's why we put them in Diamond Dyes. They contain from three to five times more than other dyes on the market! Cost more to make? Surely. But you get them for the same price as other dyes.

Next time you want to dye, try them. See how easy it is to use them. Then compare the results. Note the absence of that re-dyed look; of streaking or spotting. See that they take none of the life out of the cloth. Observe how the colors keep their brilliance through wear and washing. Your dealer will refund your money if you don't agree Diamond Dyes are better dyes.

The white package of Diamond Dyes is the original "all-purpose" dye for any and every kind of material. It will dye or tint silk, wool, cotton, linen, rayon or any mixture of materials. The blue package is a special dye, for silk or wool only. With it you can dye your valuable articles of silk or wool with results equal to the finest professional work. When you buy—remember this. The blue package dyes silk or wool only. The white package will dye every kind of goods, including silk and wool. Your dealer has both packages.
