WHED GAME AS A FARM CROP By Aldo Leopold

Director, National Game Survey whether he wishes to market it by to others.

How does one produce a crop of game? Most people, when one speaks will spread its quail only half a mile. of raising game, immediately think of chicken-wire pens and artificial methods. Some kinds of game can be raised under wire, but it is an expensive method, and not nearly so when a blizzard came, the whole satisfactory as fixing up the land so that game will raise itself. It is little that game will raise itself that game are game will raise itself. It is little that game will raise itself that game are game will raise itself. It is little that game are game will raise itself that game are game are ga tion, most game-specially quail, rabbit and pheasants, will raise themselves, in numbers far beyond what the most persistent hunter has encountered in recent years.

Take quail, for instance. I doubt if there are many farms that will average a quail per acre. Yet I have recently seen a farm that raised 3 per acre-or ten times the average matter of skill and experience. Well- being built by Mr. Wertz of Page, a crop-for six years running. How? Simply by leaving suitable cover, feeding in winter, and killing a dozen or so hunting cats each year. There was no cash cost except a little grain. Winter-feeding and keeping down YOU CAN WHIP OUR natural enemies of game requires no explanation, but what about the brush cover? Is it really good farming to leave brush along fencerows, streambanks and wood lots?

I personally do not believe there is any wholesale yes or no answer. I am convinced that the wholesale condemnation of brush cover was premature. Every year of scientific investigation is showing up new reasons for believing that brush cover of the right kind, in the right place, may be a valuable farm asset. Some of these reasons pertain not only to the welfare of game crops,

Take for instance, the recent discovery that the pea aphid is seldom troublesome in the neighborhood of ungrazed woodlots with dense undergrowth. Why? Apparently because the natural enemies of the pea aphid-namely the syrphid

Let us now consider pheasants. The thing the quail most often lacks is brush, but the thing the pheasant needs is grassy or reed swamps. The swamp is his refuge and his delight, especially in spring when the rest of the land is bare, and in fall when he makes his get-away from hunters.
