John Deere-Hoover Two-Horse Potato Digger

In this and other sections where potatoes are grown, the John Deere-Hoover is the popular digger. It's the digger that delivers clean potatoes—free from dirt, trash and vines in a condition that makes them easier to handle and gives them a higher market value.

The agitating elevator on the John Deere-Hoover removes the dirt from the potatoes and drops them on top of the ground, clean and easy to pick up.

You can quickly and easily adjust depth to get all the potatoes without cutting them. The properly shaped shovel runs under the hills at uniform depth and raises the potatoes to the elevator.

Two horses handle this digger with ease in ordinary conditions. It is a light-weight machine, yet strong enough to meet any conditions found in this region.

The John Deere-Hoover will give you many years of good service. The main frame is of steel. Renewable chilled iron bearings carry the weight of the elevator.

Be sure to come in and see the John Deere-Hoover before you buy.

"DARK STREETS" PLOT BASED ON REAL GANG LIFE

Frank Lloyd, director of "Dark Streets," went to the height of realism in filming gangster sequences for the First National picture which comes to the Royal Theatre Sunday and Monday.

The robbery of the Acme Silk Company's warehouse, a focal point in the dramatic story, was patterned after the famous burglary several years ago of the Union Ice and Storage Company's warehouse in Los Angeles.

Lloyd dispatched set designers to the Los Angeles scene to copy the studio set from the ice company's warehouse and the streets in the vicinity.

From police officers who worked on the case the director learned the plan of action used by the burglars and then used the same routine for his film. Details, such as the lighting of a cigarette by the crooks, which caused their discovery, were incorporated into the screen story.

Only in the outcome of the robbery did Lloyd veer from his realistic example. In the actual robbery, three crooks were killed and the burglary frustrated. The film story gives an unusual twist to the ending.

Jack Mulhall portrays a dual leading role in "Dark Streets." He is both gangster and cop, twin brothers. Lila Lee is the girl. The cast includes Aggie Herring, Maurice Black, Pat Harmon and E. H. Calvert.

The story is an adaptation of Richard Connell's Cosmopolitan Magazine tale, "Pat and Mike." Bradley King wrote the screen play.
