

Salts Fine for Aching Kidneys

When Back Hurts Flush Your Kidneys as You Clean Your Bowels

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, sometimes get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region begin drinking lots of water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is intended to flush clogged kidneys and help stimulate them to activity. It also helps neutralize the acids in the urine so they no longer irritate, thus helping to relieve bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in trying to correct kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Death Mystery Reopens Dot King Inquiry

The mysterious death in a fall at Washington and deathbed statement of Mrs. Aurelia Dreyfus, has reopened the inquiry into the slaying in 1923 of Dot King, Broadway butterfly. (Upper left) District Attorney Leo Rover of Washington, who, on insistence of Mrs. Dreyfus's family, has reopened the investigation of her death. (Center) Diagram showing the death scene of Mrs. Dreyfus. Albert Guimares, one of the principal figures in the slaying of Dot King, is again in the limelight. Mrs. Aurelia Dreyfus, blonde divorcee, who fell to her death during a dance at the exclusive Potomac Boat Club in October. (Lower left) John Mitchell, Philadelphia millionaire, who was revealed as the mysterious "John Marshall." Edmund McBrien, escort of Mrs. Dreyfus at the exclusive boat club when she either fell or was thrown from the balcony.

The code of the underworld is fairly elastic. But there is one offense for which, regardless of the circumstances, the punishment is always death, a death that comes swifter than almost any other man-made retribution. That offense is known as "squealing." It is generally believed that it cost the life of Dot King, gay beauty of the Great White Way, six years ago. And now the police are proceeding on the theory that it may supply the motive for the mysterious death of yet another butterfly, Mrs. Aurelia Fischer Dreyfus, who was killed by a fall from the balcony of the fashionable Potomac Boat Club, at the conclusion of a dance held there on October 20 last. Mrs. Dreyfus, it has been revealed, was an intimate of Dot King and her crowd in the days when her jeweled figure in a night club was the signal for sudden silence and then a buzz of comment and gossip. For, despite Dot's efforts at secrecy, it was known that a fortune was being lavished on her by a famous millionaire.

Was Mrs. Dreyfus, the mysterious blonde, a key figure in the alibi of Albert Guimares, who was arrested as a suspect in the murder of Dot King, found in bed in Fifty-seventh street apartment, with a bottle of chloroform at her side, and her jewels missing? It will be recalled that an Edmund McBrien, Guimares' roommate, and an unknown blonde supported the alibi offered by Guimares and he was subsequently released. McBrien refused to reveal the name of the "blonde" then implicated on the ground that "it would break up her home life." It has since been learned that at that time Mrs. Dreyfus was the wife of Herbert Dreyfus, prominent New York business man. She was later divorced, McBrien being named as the co-respondent. Since then the couple have been frequently seen together, although they did not marry after the decree was granted. It was with McBrien that Mrs. Dreyfus spent her last days in Washington, visiting her family, a visit that was terminated by her sudden death.

According to affidavits, sworn by the family of Mrs. Dreyfus, she is said to have frequently stated that she was forced to make misstatements in the testimony offered by her in support of the alibi of Guimares. And individual members of her family say that she had acquainted them with the real facts. If the police can establish that Mrs. Dreyfus met her death for squealing, they may yet establish the motive and find the slayer of Dot King.

Insull's Fallacies. From Indianapolis News. Samuel Insull was ingenious, but not convincing in a radio address he made recently from Chicago. With perhaps a tract of petulance he told his auditors, in effect, that they should not worry over huge public utility capitalizations, which they might regard as inflated when compared with the assets represented. "There is no connection between capitalization and rates," continued Mr. Insull. "By the law of the land rates are based upon the fair value of the property used and useful in the service," and the capital stock of a company may be watered until it weeps without affecting that value.

This is the sheepest nonsense, as a practical business formula. We have too much respect for the intelligence of the speaker to think that, in retrospect, he will not, at least tacitly, concede the fact. As a matter of policy, it is incumbent on him and all his associates in the utility business to strive to collect enough revenue from pa-

It's Our Turn Now. From Minneapolis Journal. The Brooklyn Eagle, democratic and eastern-minded, takes exception to President Hoover's declaration, in his Louisville speech, that the "American people are convinced" of the necessity for, and the desirability of, a great inland system of waterways. More than that, the Eagle evidently thinks it wrong in principle, and manifestly unfair, that the nation as a whole should finance public improvements not calculated to benefit directly all the 48 states.

It remarks that in an American city the cost of a public improvement that benefits only part of the community is assessed largely against the benefited area, instead of against the city as a whole. Some such plan should be used to pay for inland waterway development, it apparently believes, for it says: "One may reasonably ask to be convinced of the justice of a proceeding that charges against the population of states not affected a great part of the cost of development quite outside their territory."

How now? Who paid for building the Panama canal? Was the cost assessed against the states directly benefited—the states of the Atlantic seaboard and of the Pacific

Heat Co. and the Merchants' Heat and Light Co. were consolidated; the argument was made that, although the capitalization was $48,000,000, the rate valuation was fixed at $40,000,000, so consumers would not suffer much. What was not mentioned was that charges would be abundant enough to support the $48,000,000. In reality the $40,000,000 base became a fiction, notwithstanding that it was some $10,000,000 in excess of what expert appraisers found the net reproduction value of the combined properties to be at the time.

FALSE HEMS The decorative old-fashioned idea of "false hems" is being revived. A brown satin gown has a 16-inch hem of crepe, joined in scallops and ending in scallops.

Rattlesnakes, owls and prairie dogs do not live together as it is sometimes said they do. Both the snake and the owl live off such rodents as the prairie dogs.

Hardly! Uncle Sam paid for the Panama canal out of the common coffers. He assessed the cost against the states of the Mississippi Valley, states actually and greatly harmed by the canal, in the same degree that he assessed it against New York, California, and the other states that have been greatly helped by the canal.

The midlands joined with the states of both coasts to cut the big ditch across the isthmus. It is only fair now that both coasts join with the midlands to create a 9-foot channel in the Mississippi system, and to link the Great Lakes with tidewater through the St. Lawrence.

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.
