O'NEILL—NELIGH BUS HITS HERD OF HORSES

The O'Neill-Neligh large, white bus, owned and operated by Nettleson & Tomlinson and driven by Glen Tomlinson, ran head-on into a bunch of fifteen horses on highway No. 8, about three miles north of Ewing, Monday evening. Two of the horses were killed instantly and two others were so badly injured that they were shot soon after the accident.

Mr. Tomlinson says that when the horses came into his light they were too close to stop; one of the horses was thrown onto the hood and broke out the windshield; the bus ran into the ditch but did not turn over. Glen received a slight cut on one wrist that bled profusely for a time. The bus was pulled back on the highway and was driven to Ewing that night.

We understand that the horses were owned by Norfolk parties; that they were rodeo horses that had taken part in a rodeo at Dikeman's park near Royal.

TO GIVE YOU AN EXTRA MARGIN OF SAFETY

THE catcher's job is the most dangerous on the team, so he protects himself with masks and pads that give a Margin of Safety. Your motor's job is a dangerous one if the oil you're using is less than the best.

Your motor needs a margin of safety against heat and wear, and all the abuses that so often take motors to the repair shop before their time. The Improved Tagolene was perfected to stand every known abuse. Speed-testing at 80 miles an hour and more proved its strength and safety.

At your ordinary speeds of 30, 50, and 70, think what your margin of safety is with Tagolene—speed-proofed at 80! You won't need to "test" Tagolene; it is tested and proved by Skelly chemists and on the road to give you lasting protection. When you next need an oil change—change to Tagolene.
