The box elders and honey locusts shown in the picture were planted in the hard clay hill top in Frontier county, in April, 1929. The picture was taken in August, 1929, near the end of the third growing season. The height of the trees in comparison with the man among them shows the remarkable growth made by the box elders in that section of the state. The little honey locust in the foreground are from 3 to 5 feet tall at the end of the third year.

The men who took care of the trees have kept out the weeds and cultivated the soil to keep it in good condition.
