HOOVER, THE DOCTOR

The majority of the American people generally get right if given time enough to think it over quietly. At times they may stam pede, but after the excitement is over and reason is restored they drift back to common sense solution of the questions that trouble. The trend of opinion now is back to the realization that Dr. Hoover is a dependable family physician after all. The patient was sicker than they thought. The doctor stayed in the sick room, waited, watched, worked and prescribed. He was not responsible for the disease. His duty was to cure if possible. He was patient, loyal and skillful. At times relatives and friends were most ready to mob him because he would not prescribe some of their quack remedies. True to his profession he remained steadfast. Faint signs of improvement in the patients' condition began to show. The change was difficult at first to detect. The trained eye could see it. Slowly the recovery began its course. The crisis had been passed. Hope was revived and courage renewed. In time the sick will be back to normal. Those who came to scoff remained to pray. They now admit that Mr. Hoover is not such a bad man after all. That he did not get the country into trouble but he is doing more than one man's work in getting it out.—Dillon (Mont.) Tribune.

In 1919 Mr. and Mrs. Wettlaufer moved to O'Neill because of the ill health of the former, who passed away September 20, 1921.

Mrs. Wettlaufer was united with the Presbyterian church of this city in 1920, and was a faithful member until her death.

Besides her children she leaves 30 grand children and one great grandchild; two brothers, Fred Paul, Dearborn, Michigan, and Henry Roeth, Disbury, Alta, Canada.
