from the extension circular, No. 462, Repair of Clothing and Household Linens.

Sewing machine darning with embroidery hoops is easily and quickly done and is satisfactory for mending small holes and worn places in linens and underwear. The three-cornered tear, with an over-hand patch, set in overall patch, repair of stocking and sweater darn.

A convenient place to work, good light, a comfortable chair, and necessary equipment all help to make mending easier and more satisfactory.

not won a game this year, suffering the last defeat at the hands of Oklahoma last Saturday with a score of 14 to 0. The game the coming Saturday is with Missouri and if Nebraska does not play a better game than they did in the last two there will be another defeat charged against them.

Today, October 27, is Navy Day by proclamation of Governor R. L. Cochran, who issued a proclamation to that effect on the 18th day of October, 1938. In his proclamation he urged that the day be celebrated by appropriate services by the people of the state generally. This gives an opportunity for former Lieutenant Governor Metcalf's staff of admirals to get into action.

Even though the New Deal may not acknowledge it, this country will owe quite a debt of gratitude to Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace when this campaign is over. Indeed he deserves a Carnegie medal or whatever it is that is given to brave men in politics, for he is the boy who is putting life, zip, and, most of all, humor into this year's campaign.

Aside from Marse Henry Wallace, the New Dealers have given up the ghost or have been relegated into temporary obscurity. Take, for instance, the strange case of Mr. Roosevelt. Not in six years has he been as silent as in recent weeks. Perhaps he is still unnerved by the shelling given him by the Democrats he undertook to purge from the party. Perhaps Mr. Roosevelt is afraid someone will commence laughing if he again tells the country he will balance the budget next year or that "we planned it that way."

At all events, Mr. Roosevelt finds it expedient to excuse himself from taking the stump in this year's campaign. There are no plans for trips across the country, as in previous years, to give a helping hand to some of the Democratic candidates who now sorely need his help. No longer do the press conferences rock with merry laughter over quips and wise-cracks. The White House and Hyde Park have become somewhat funereal.

So has Democratic headquarters here. James Aloysius Farley, who once was called "smiling Jim," now goes around with a look on his face as though he had a pain all the way up his broad back. Perhaps it is the pain the purge gave him. Most lugubrious appearing of all is my esteemed contemporary, the Democratic publicity director. In seclusion and out of sight are Tommy Corcoran and Benny Cohen. The blankets will be taken off of them after the election. Harold L. Ickes, as usual, growls at everyone and Harry Hopkins has a face as long as an arm.

But not so Marse Henry Wallace. There is a man for you! Like the youth on the flying trapeze, he goes through the air with the greatest of ease, jumping from one excuse for New Deal failure to another and from panacea to panacea, oblivious of what he favored the day previously. Indeed, it appears he does not greatly care where he lands, if he can only keep the farmers kidded until election day.

Marse Henry is really trying. For instance, the other day he appeared before the Woman's National Democratic Club and there, according to the newspapers, blared the "spendthrift policies of the Republicans in the twenties" for the Roosevelt depression. He said that with a perfectly straight face. This was funnier even than the observation the same day of the newest New Deal apologists among the columnists, Ernest K. Lindley, who contended the "Administration made the mistake of trying to balance the budget too quickly." Imagine all these New Dealers lying awake nights worrying about their mistake of bringing the budget into balance too quickly! It's a darned shame!

"Big-hearted Wallace" Marse Henry, however, is at his best when he is dealing with the farm situation. As the Baltimore Sun has said, "our big-hearted Secretary of Agriculture knows as many ways of saving the farmer as there are petals on a daisy."

"When one scheme fails," added this 100-year old Democratic newspaper, "he is always right there with another. He is going to make the farmer love him—and the Administration—if he has to make over America to do it."

It will be remembered that about six weeks ago Marse Henry delivered himself of a resounding philippic to a group of farm leaders denouncing in unmeasured words plans for subsidizing farm exports. Then about two weeks later, marvelous
