In Remembrance

To commemorate the birth of the Father of our Country, George Washington, we would best remember him by what he did for this nation, and to review what this nation means to us. George Washington fought for the independence and the freedom of this country. He saw our need for liberty and the demand of the people to stand upon their own two feet, to govern themselves and abide by the laws made by themselves, to declare their own taxation, to elect to office those men they chose. We who live in America today have only our historians to tell us of the struggle and victory of this country against the forces working against it. We are enjoying the fruits of it. There are many events in present affairs when we feel that today our problem is more serious than ever before, that the struggle has never been more severe. How can any man, brought up in a system of public schools where instruction and school books are free, a nation where his religion is not restricted, where freedom of the press, of thought and of speech is not being stifled by force and fanatics, how can any man be anything but appreciative of the blessings visited upon Americans?

We trace back to the time of Washington for our original declaration of an independent nation. We honor his birthday with a reminder of our good fortune to be citizens under this flag. We would like to feel that every one thought the same as we do upon this subject. But what about a man saying, "What this country needs is a Hitler?" Such a remark caused another man to reply, "I was born and raised in another country. I can still remember. Americans do not realize. They should appreciate and be very grateful for this country."

To the men of 1776 we pledge ourselves to uphold those things for which they fought, and to make proud the heart of the Father of this Country, by being no ism but Americanism.

Taxes Increase Rapidly Under the New Deal

The Northwestern Bell Telephone Company and subsidiaries at the end of 1938 owned and operated 821,000 telephones in the states of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, South Dakota and North Dakota. There was a net gain of 20,459 telephones, or about 2.5 per cent, during the year. Calls averaged 5,000,000 daily. Of this daily average, about 100,000 were long distance calls.

These figures are from the annual report of the board of directors of the Northwestern Bell Telephone Company announced by President A. A. Lowman at the annual meeting of the company February 9. The figures include those of the Tri-State Telephone and Telegraph Company and the Dakota Central Telephone Company, subsidiaries of the Northwestern Bell Company.

The report declares that the dependability of telephone service steadily improved, but earnings for 1938, as for 1937, were unsatisfactory. There have been such increases in taxes and wage levels the last few years that even if the volume of their business today were equal to that preceding the depression, these companies still would not be on a satisfactory earning basis. Taxes assignable to operations of the Northwestern Bell Company and its subsidiaries for the year 1938 amounted to $5,228,965. This was an increase of more than 30 per cent as compared with 1936 and an increase of 57 per cent as compared with 1935.

Billboard Beautiful

This paper has taken a stand, for a long time, against unsightly signs, the ugly billboards that dot the highways and obstruct the view of scenic spots. Nature scarcely needs the addition of advertised coffee, cars and cafeterias, to enhance its beauty. How many times have O'Neill residents been riding along a highway remarking about the loveliness of some roadside picture, when up pops a billboard to hide and mar it, but which informs you fully of the merits of a varnish or liver pills. The public has put up with increased billboards and until recently have suffered with little direct action. However, billboard advertisers realized the feeling and signs were removed from residential sections in many cases, and billboards were planned to be more attractive. But can a billboard ever be beautiful? Many states say no, and follow this up with laws regulating the erection of outdoor advertising. We have written before of many a summer Sunday ride spoiled by too many signs. Vermont and Virginia, and now New York, have their laws controlling the problem. A prominent Florida city had a recent controversy regarding the placing of a prominent sign which was an eye-sore to the citizens who prided themselves on the beauty of their city. So the movement grows and will probably spread to other states. The nation is becoming more conscious of its roadside beauty and are anxious to make national highways attractive. It was Ogden Nash who cleverly put it in his "Song of the Open Road."

"I think that I shall never see A billboard lovely as a tree Perhaps, unless the billboards fall, I'll never see a tree at all."

All churches are invited to join in the World's Day of Prayer at the Presbyterian Church at 8 p. m., on Good Friday, February 24.

And what will be the outcome of the discussions in O'Neill concerning farm relief? When all is said and done, it still takes money to lift the mortgage on the old farmstead.

In being caught between the displeasure of the Hebrews and the Arabs in the Palestine controversy, John Bull can now sympathize with the politician who promised too many things to too many people before the election.
