BIBLE COMMENT

FOR SUNDAY, DEC. 12

EPISTLES OF PAUL STAND AS WORLD'S GREATEST LETTERS

The Apostle Peter, while he commended "beloved brother Paul's" Epistles (II Peter 3:15-16) said also that Paul had written "some things hard to be understood."

The New Testament contains epistles by Paul, Peter, James, John and Jude. Of these a greater number are by Paul. As far as their length, variety, subject matter, and historic place and impact upon the Christian church, they are much the most formidable, even though the Epistles are all alike and bear much similarity in their expression.

If we were to judge Paul's Epistles by those more obscure and difficult passages to which Peter referred or by the many references to local problems and controversies in the churches, we should hardly think of his letters as being the world's greatest.

But think of the many passages in which Paul showed himself far in advance of his age and well abreast of modern thought and movements in his conception of liberty. Think of his conception of church and society in which men are members one of another. Think of the clarity of his zeal for righteousness and the soundness of his ideas concerning life and labor. And then you have reason to appreciate the greatness of Paul and his letters.

If Paul had written nothing but the 13th chapter of I Corinthians, the "love" chapter, that gem of spiritual and literary perfection would have marked his greatness. But that is only the finest of many richly beautiful chapters.

And his prayer for his fellow-Christians in the closing verses of Ephesians 3 has an eloquence of words that matches the magnitude of his vision of the boundless possibilities of Christian attainment.

These are but a few examples of the world's greatest letters. With the vigor and variety of the Pauline conceptions was combined a rich vocabulary and a high skill in the use of words.

Men of action are not always articulate or forceful in expression, but Paul was as great in words, at least in the written word, as he was in deeds.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Grage left Saturday for Albion where they spent a few days visiting friends and relatives.

Scenes Like This Seem A Long Ways Off...

YES, right now at Christmas time, the Spring work seems like a long ways off . . . even months ahead. But this is the proper time of the year to think about reconditioning the tractor you already have. Expert overhauling by our skilled mechanics will insure several more years of economical performance out of your present tractor.

SO WHY NOT book a date now for "shop work" in our recently-enlarged repair department? We'd be pleased to make an estimate for you. Bring 'er in and you'll be all set for next Spring's work.

USED TRACTORS

A Suggestion for Christmas: Give Her A Checking Account . . .

MOM IS REALLY just as good a manager as you make it possible for her to be. A checking account which automatically helps her budget family accounts would put her on a really "business-like" basis.

Why Not Give Her One for Christmas?
