Lincoln — Nebraska community property law apparently will be repealed, despite the prediction that the action virtually will halve the state's benefits from federal irrigation projects.

Sen. Arthur Carmody, of Trenton, gave the warning, but next day the repeal bill was advanced in the unicameral with debate. Carmody explained that the National Reclamation Bureau has limited to 160 acres the amount of land any farmer may irrigate.

In the sprawling Western states, the 160-acre limitation, however feasible it may appear in the East, has been labeled "ridiculous."

The road problem continues to plague the unicameral, and lines of the battle are beginning to be drawn.

Sen. Cliff Ogden, of Omaha, withdrew his support of the governor's highway development program after the lawmakers gave tentative approval to a change in the formula for allocating the counties' share of gasoline tax revenue.

He said Douglas county already is putting in more tax money than it gets back, and he could not permit the county's share to be whittled down even more under the formula change sponsored by Sen. Norris Schroeder, of Hoskins, and also vote for the governor's program.

The executive committee of the Better Nebraska association, formed to help enact the program, is scheduled to meet at Lincoln this week to discuss the situation.

The unicameral breathed new life into Sen. Hugh Carson's bill abolishing capital punishment, overriding the decision of its judiciary committee.

Ord's Senator Carson led the fight against the death penalty, arguing society cannot control crimes of violence by becoming party to them.

The bill had cleared the first hurdle of the committee's indefinite postponement, but it still must win passage through the legislature.

Permissive school redistricting also won tentative approval, after friends of the legislation beat down three amendments they contended would leave the bill impotent.

The bill provides for county committees to meet once a year and discuss their school situation. If redistricting seems to answer, the committee would draft a plan, air it in public hearing, and submit it to a state committee appointed by the governor.

The state body's recommendations could be adopted or vetoed, and the proposal then submitted to a vote of the people.

Rural and high school districts would ballot as separate units so that proponents explained, they could not be overridden by a vote of urban areas.

Sen. Hal Bridenbaugh, of Dakota City, tried hard to eliminate the one mandatory provision of the bill; the annual meeting of the county committees. He wanted the meeting called only if petitioned for by 20 percent of the eligible voters in the area. But he was voted down, 13-22.

Opposition to the bill generally stemmed from senators who argued roads must be improved before redistricting can be accomplished.

Proponents countered with the conditions that roads never will be improved until redistricting is begun.

Gov. Val Peterson has signed into law an emergency bill providing state funds to help educate physically and mentally handicapped children.

The state will put up $400 a year for the physically disabled youngsters, and $100 annually for those with lower-than-normal IQs, after their districts have provided the regular per-pupil cost.

The state department of public instruction will ask the appropriation committee for a $250,000 1949-'51 biennial budget to carry out the program.

Parents of spastic children were the most ardent supporters of the bill during its course through the legislature.

The miscellaneous appropriations committee swung the axe wide and killed bills providing retirement systems for justices of the state supreme court, district judges, and state employees.

Another bill, calling for mandatory retirement systems for governmental employees in all cities and towns. Observers predicted the action foreshadowed unsympathetic attention to remaining pensions and salary-raising bills still to be acted on by the committee.

HEADS DEFENSE... With the resignation of James V. Forrester becoming effective March 31, the job of secretary of defense has been given to Louis A. Johnson (above).

Johnson was assistant secretary of war from 1937 to 1940, and contributed heavily to President Truman's successful 1948 campaign.

Equality Before the Law

82 years ago this month Nebraska attained statehood. Through all these years, her Great Seal has proudly displayed the motto, "Equality Before The Law."

Today, more than ever, folks in Nebraska realize that all this is a precious part of what we call Democracy—the right of every individual to choose for himself; to vote as he wishes; to drink a moderate beverage like beer.
