Men Who Must Implement Atlantic Pact Kept Under Fire for 4 1/2 Hours

By DREW PEARSON

Atlantic Pact Combed

Terse, urgent questions affecting our hopes for peace came boiling to the top the other day behind closed doors of the separate foreign relations committee. Answering them, the men who must implement the North Atlantic pact were kept under steady fire for 4 1/2 hours. Big, bull-voiced Senator Vandenberg set the pace, but each senator got a load of questions off his chest. They combed the pact's fine print for pitfalls and loopholes, and searched for hidden meanings between the lines. As a result, many tough problems were plowed up. The chief targets in this verbal shooting gallery were Secretary of State Acheson, Secretary of Defense Johnson and ECA Ambassador Harriman. They talked brilliantly, but not quite enough to please the senators. "I can't be offhand and free about information that involves other countries," Acheson retorted impatiently, when pressed for details. Johnson also buttoned up during a barrage of questions on atomic energy from Senator McMahon, of Connecticut. They queried were based on secret information which McMahon had learned at the Pentagon, and Johnson objected to going into details in front of committee clerks. This caused McMahon to declare that he wouldn't support the pact if he couldn't get the information he wanted. "If the price of the senator's vote," bristled Johnson, "is my violation of what I consider the security of the nation, then we may have to forego the senator's vote."

Senate Stairs Steep

To add to the turmoil, the meeting was interrupted 13 times by roll-call votes on the senate floor. This kept the senators straggling up and down stairs to the senate floor until 71-year-old Sen. George of Georgia, finally snored in disgust. "By God, I can't go up and down those stairs any more!" And he quit the meeting. Another problem was how much to tell the press. Vandenberg was against issuing any release until the secretary of state formally presented the military program to congress. The Michigan Republican warned, however, that "Drew Pearson has a dictaphone hidden in here." Later, chairman Tom Connally stamped angrily into the meeting after a trip upstairs to vote. "Somebody has already leaked the amount (of the proposed military aid)," he thundered. "Some newspapermen told me the figure and asked if that was correct."

Following this incident, it was agreed to release an outline of the one billion, 130 million dollar plan to help rearm the North Atlantic treaty nations. Here are other highlights of the meeting.

Senator Vandenberg wanted to clarify the important question of whether the pact was just another old-fashioned military alliance or a genuine instrument of collective security. He pointed out that the U. N. charter recognizes the right of nations to "collective self-defense" in case of attack. The charter, however, adds in Article 51: "Measures taken by members (of the U. N.) in the exercise of this right of self-defense shall be immediately reported to the security council."

Does this mean, Vandenberg asked, that the treaty nations must report their secret defense plans to the security council—where Russia has easy access? This was something none of them wanted to do, but Senator Pepper of Florida warned that the past, itself, promised to abide by the U. N. charter.

Secretary Acheson explained however, that the only "measures we are obliged to report to the security council are whatever measures may be taken jointly—after an armed attack occurs.
