Truman Says Best Plan Is to Attack Any 'Mild Break' in Nation's Economy

By DREW PEARSON

Economy Talked

President Truman discussed plans for fortifying the nation's economy against depression in a recent off-the-record talk with six Democratic senators and congressmen.

Only a meager announcement leaked out to the press, but here are the highlights of what happened. A program of "economic expansion" was proposed that may affect the future of every American.

President Truman greeted the congressional group by saying: "I think I am way ahead of you on this."

He pulled several charts out of his top, right-hand drawer showing the latest national statistics on prices, wages, profits and production up to the end of May.

He admitted that the first symptoms of depression are beginning to show and agreed that "mild break" in the economy to the best plan is to attack any stop it from spreading. He stressed, however, that he is not worried about depression — as long as each problem is met before it grows into a crisis.

Factory Loans

The legislators who called on the President were: Senators James Murray, of Montana; Elbert Thomas, of Utah; John Sparkman, of Alabama; Hubert Humphrey, of Minnesota; Congressman Andy Biemiller, of Helen Gahagan Douglas, of California; and Congresswoman Helen Gahagan Douglas, of California — all Democrats.

At the top of the five-point "economic expansion" program they urged on Truman was promotion of private investment and production by offering FHA-type loans to build plants. Private enterprise, they agreed, is the key to a healthy economy. The legislators also recommended:

1. A national advisory board, combining the business, labor, agriculture and consumer committees that now exist separately;
2. Measures to deal directly with serious unemployment wherever and whenever it develops;
3. Long-range planning for public works and resource development;
4. Voluntary adjustments in purchasing power.

Truman said he couldn't endorse the program without studying the details, but remarked: "You are my kind of folks."

Their kind of thinking, he added, had always coincided with his own. It had been his belief and policy to ease off inflation controls gradually and give the economy a chance to adjust itself. But the GOP controlled 80th congress scrapped all controls at once, let prices and profits soar unopposed a "rich man's" tax bill, checked; then, as a last straw,

"That was no time for rich man's tax bill — when profits were at their highest," Truman shook his head.

The inevitable result was "economic dislocation," the President declared. From such dizzy heights, it would only be natural for prices, profits, wages and production to come crashing down. Therefore, he said, the government must throw road-blocks in the way to prevent stampeding the economy into depression. If the public doesn't get panicky, Truman added, there is no danger of depression.

Dixiecrat Postmasters

South Carolina's wily Sen. Olin Johnston reversed the tables on President Truman the other day and applied some sly counterpressure to get postmasters appointed in his state.

It is no secret that the President has been holding up appointments to punish Southern senators and congressmen who have opposed his program. But what the White House didn't take into account is that Johnston happens to be chairman of the senate post office committee which must pass on all postmaster appointments.

So the South Carolinian sidled up to Sen. Howard McGrath, Democratic national chairman, and later to Senator Secretary Les Biffle, the President's close friend. Drawing sweetly, Johnston let it be known that he was disturbed over not getting postmasters for South Carolina, and hinted that maybe he would just block all appointments until those for his own state came through.

Johnston allowed time for his remarks to pass on to the White House, then called for an appointment. When he was ushered into the President's office, he talked about other matters. Then he mentioned casually: "I notice a lot of postmasters have been appointed lately, but my state hasn't gotten any."

Wouldn't the President please, he asked, look into the matter? Scratching a note on his pad, Truman replied: "Yes, we'll attend to that right away."
