SMALL DOSES -- Past & Present:

Little Things That Count

By ROMAIN SAUNDERS, Special Correspondent

A newspaper out at Reno, Nev., says it is frightened at the black headlines. So am I. The little things that don't rate a heading are what make life worth living. The Reno paper gives us this:

Angels Camp, Calif., is preparing for its annual frog-jumping contest, a New York banker says that millions who have learned habits of thrift during the war will continue to practice them in peace; the thirty-five years from 1910 to 1945 saw a decrease of 80 percent in the deaths of white children 1 to 14 years of age in this country; a psychiatrist at Yale says labor leaders, business executives and public officials can be tested to determine their temperamental fitness for making important decisions; Idaho silver, lead and zinc miners settled their wage dispute with operators without a strike.

Refreshing to turn from the world's sordid tragedies to the simple things, simpler yet life's big things in the final analysis. And we get these heartwarming little things mirrored weekly in the hometown paper.

Pink roses, clusters of prairie snowballs, rows of dainty bluebells hanging from long stems, the colorful iris and flashy yellow bloom, give the waving sea-of-green of prairie-land its June buttonhole bouquet. Color and fragrance, the matchless charm of nature's summer jewels. Jane Dale has told it in verse. Retaining the sentiment, I have made a few changes:

I do not wish for mansions, wealth or costly clothes; I ask only for the leisure to appreciate a rose; To listen to the robin's morning serenade; To sit quietly 'neath the elm's cooling shade.

I do not seek the purple robes of state and power. Give me instead the beauty of the sunset hour; Give me the time to watch the midnight sky, To see the Northern Lights flare up then quickly die.

I do not ask for homage from those of high estate

But just a merry smile from children around my gate; A cordial handclasp from some true friend— All these to cherish, riches without end!

With Prof. George's boys and girls resplendent in uniform and precise formation, to blow the horns and beat the drums, O'Neill's musical taste will be gratified without the Petrillo Union's canned offerings.
