Labor Fears the Verdict

By ROMAINE SAUNDERS, Special Correspondent

We're Adding Lines
but Long Distance is still Crowded

The usual summer increase in long distance calling is much greater this year than ever before. This up-surge of calls on top of the already heavily loaded lines is increasing the number of calls that are being delayed.

New facilities are being added as fast as possible in order to bring long distance service back to prewar speeds and even faster. Acute material shortages are making this task difficult. In the meantime you usually will get faster service if you place your calls before 9 A. M. or after 3 P. M.
