11-Cent Spuds and Other Things

Can you remember 11-cent potatoes? Down in the city a short time ago I bought 10 pounds of potatoes for my daughter-in-law for 42 cents, which meant $2.52 a bushel. They say Uncle Sam has millions invested in spuds that have rotted. Quite probable; merely another incident of the monumental folly down at Washington.

But what were you going to say about 11-cent potatoes? Mike Sullivan, John Mann, Fred Plunder and other early O'Neill merchants loaded many cars down on the railroad tracks with 11-cent and 15-cent per bushel spuds. The sod house homesteader was a great potato and melon grower. He couldn't do much with the melon only eat them and give them away, other than the lady of the sodhouse converting the rinds into preserves if she could trade in enough 5-cent a dozen eggs to get the sugar. But potatoes, they represented silver dollars — a dollar as big as a wheel of the wagon out by the hay shed.

It took a lot of potatoes to represent a dollar, but homesteaders had lots of them. Fifty bushels hauled to town meant at least $11 — a sack of flour, footwear for the family, mittens and a bar of soap. A tough way to live, you say. Maybe so. But it made men and women who faced life unafraid, knew what it was to "root hog or die" and forged on the anvil of individual effort a heritage that this generation just takes for granted. If reduced to boiled potatoes and corn bread, could we still honor father and mother by holding our heads high?

So man has tapped the basic power of the universe, has he, I wonder. Basic power is to create, give life, growth. What man has brought forth in shuddering horror destroys, blows to fragments, kills — to his shame outrivals the death Angel. By calculation of an exact science, the hand of man snaps the lifeline of multitudes in the fraction of a second; but he cannot give life to the merest speck of an insect.

In Morrill Hall down at our capital city are collections of about every beast and bird and creeping thing — life less, motionless specimens of the taxidermist's clever hands. What's wrong? Why does the hyena not bark and the Bengal tiger wave a threatening tail? The hand of man has brought the outward forms to perfection but no warm lifeblood flows to nerve centers; the stuffed shell must forever remain lifeless, motionless, and not able to give life why does man defy the only being endowed with "basic power?"

The president of an eastern soup company died at age 53. Life is uncertain if sustained on a diet of soup.

Townsend clubs function in a few places, shining examples of hopeful optimism if nothing else.

A fastidious old coyote, maybe something larger of the lobo tribe, has killed 12 sheep over at the Bly ranch. He makes a specialty of lamb liver, but will hamstring a calf if the cow is off guard. Lobo's treatment of a sheep is unique. The first act is to close his fangs over the jugular vein, which leaves the victim limp. The belly is torn open to let the vitals out. He makes a feast on the warm liver, then trots away. As hunger urges him back to the flock, the dead sheep is ignored, maybe because he suspects poison, and closes his jaw over the throat of another victim.

Perhaps nothing in the vast variety of animated creatures is quite so de-emphasized before an enemy at a sheep.

The AFL met with disaster in Nebraska. The treasure chest had been opened to keep a proposed amendment of the November ballot and the injunction was denied. Claiming 93 percent of the workers in Lincoln Western Electric the vote disclosed 617 against unionizing and 100 for the proposal. Sentiment in Nebraska seems to be pretty well defined.

The streets of St. Petersburg, Fla., are provided with benches that have become traditional as mating places for elderly couples. The streets Atkinson are also provided with benches which seem to be monopolized by the sub-intelligentsia of a retired male group who exchange wisdom and wisecracks when Nebraska weather permits sitting out in the open. O'Neill has a similar affinity on the corner of Fourth and Douglas. May I suggest to both Atkinson and O'Neill groups that they slide over and make room for some of the old gals.

If the newspaper pictures of Mr. Wallace are authentic, his shaggy bright locks were transformed to snow white during the hours between September 20 and September 21. Who fain would be cabinet member?

Religious scruples prevent a Hindu from taking the life of any creature — except one of his kind.
