Most Taverns Do More Than Barely Keep Within the Law

Nebraska has one of the best liquor control laws in the nation. This law, together with rules adopted by the liquor control commission, clearly specifies the rights and duties of all beer licensees.

Too many licensees once seemed mainly interested in knowing, "How far can I go and not get in trouble?"

The situation steadily improves. Now most beer retailers are well informed on the liquor control laws and rules. They seek to obey every one—not simply because they fear penalties but because they know careful law observance is the surest way to win and hold public good will.

This improvement in tavern operations can be partly credited to the Nebraska Committee's program of Self-Regulation. Eight years of this program has helped build in Nebraska one of the beer industry's most valued assets—a good name.
