HEAVY DEATH TOLL FOR PIGS SEEN

Farmers Normally Lose 1 Out of 3 After Farrowing

While early Spring pigs for an early Fall market this year probably will bring best prices, the death toll at farrowing is likely to be alarming.

Even in normal years, Cornbelt farmers start out with an average loss of one out of every three pigs between farrowing and weaning time.

Best available studies, according to Successful Farming magazine, show that a pig that dies at farrowing costs 140 pounds of feed. If he lives until weaning and then dies, his feed bill comes to 260 pounds.

Baby pig deaths between farrowing and weaning time have many causes—poor management, diseases, and parasites; or poor feed and feeding methods. Best thing is to look at the immediate cause of past deaths, and figure out what can be done to stop them. Studies show about half of the death losses are caused by the sow lying on her pigs.

Guardrails are pig-savers. A recent survey shows that farmers using guardrails cut death losses about two percent.

Tilt Floors
A new idea is tilting of floors in movable hog houses. When the house is raised up from eight- to 10-inches in front, pigs will stay in the back of the house. The sow will usually lie with her back up and toward the door. This way, there is less danger of pigs getting stepped on as the sow moves in and out of the house.

Loose, chaffy bedding is much better than the long, stringy kind. The sow should be restful and comfortable before and after farrowing. Getting her used to the farrowing pen, feeding lightly just before and just after farrowing, and keeping water available, all add to number of pigs saved.

Pigs dead at farrowing time account for another 16 or 17 percent of losses. The reason may be contagious abortion. If in doubt, test all sows and get rid of the reactors. If abortion isn't the trouble, something is wrong with the management or feeding program.

A good protein supplement and plenty of high-quality alfalfa are absolutely necessary, especially during the last third of gestation period. If possible, at least part of the protein should be animal protein. The entire ration should be 15 or 16 percent protein.

9 Percent 'Chilled'
In the past, one out of 11 pigs that died at farrowing was chilled, accounting for nine percent loss. This year, with more early pigs, the figure may be higher. Pig brooders are a part of the answer to this problem.

Main causes of losses occur right at farrowing time. Many pigs die because they can't get the birth membrane off their noses. Others get tangled up in their navel cord. Some need help under the brooder or to find the udder. To prevent these losses, a man should be around when the sow farrows. Constant attention is needed.

Baby pigs should get a ration that will let them make a running start to market. A sow with from seven to nine pigs will eat about three pounds of feed per day for each 100 pounds of live weight. For the average sow that means from one-fourth to one-half ton of feed during the nursing period.

On pasture the nursing sow needs a 12- to 13-percent protein ration. On dry lot, the protein content of the ration should go up to 15 or 16 percent.

For most farmers, self-feeding on either pasture or dry lot will save time, money, and feed. With both methods, creepers should be provided for the pigs.

Don't blame the supplement or grain ration for nutritional anemia in pigs during the nursing period. It is caused by an iron-copper deficiency.
