CHOLERA IS WORST PERIL TO PIG CROP

Hog cholera, again this year, is the greatest threat to plans for a bumper pig crop. The deadly virus of this No. 1 swine killer lurks in every section of the country, ready to cut down unprotected swine herds.

A wobbly gait is one sign of cholera.

Losses have run as high as 20 to 60 million dollars a year. Cholera occurs year after year, in spite of the fact that it is a totally preventable disease.

If all farmers had their pigs vaccinated against cholera, around weaning time, losses could be reduced almost to zero.

Cholera strikes without warning, and it kills swiftly. The virus is so potent that a single fly, going from one farm to another, can carry enough virus to start an outbreak. And a whole herd may die within a few days from this highly-contagious and treacherous disease.

Hog owners should watch for such symptoms as failure to eat, weakness of the legs, a tendency to burrow under bedding, scours, or unexplained death of pigs. Any of these suspicious signs calls for immediate investigation by a veterinarian, because a day's delay can mean disastrous losses. A dependable diagnosis is essential, too, because hog cholera so closely resembles several other swine diseases.

Prevention, however, is the only sure way to combat this deadly enemy of swine, and prevention means vaccination of all pigs around weaning time. Immune hogs bring better prices and can be fed to maximum weight without risk of cholera losses.
