OUT OF OLD NEBRASKA ...

Cutoffs Helped Slash Time on Overland Freight Route

By James C. Olson, Superintendent, State Historical Society

Americans have always been • attracted by short cuts, and the pioneers of the West were no exception. Indeed, in the day of the stage coach and covered wagon the possibility of saving a few miles in this vast region west of the Missouri was always looked upon with interest
—it took very few miles in distance to make a saving of a whole day in time,

One of the most notable of these early short cuts was the Nebraska City - Ft. Kearney cutoff. By leaving the Missouri river at Nebraska City and going overland on a more or less direct route to the Platte at Ft. Kearney, rather than going north to Omaha and striking west from there, it was possible to make a considerable saving in time and trouble. was this possibility, and the dream of a great overland freight route to the Rockies, which, more than any other one thing, gave Nebraska City visions of grandeur in the late 1860's.)

Firm Puts It to Use The first significant use of the Nebraska City-Ft. Kearney cutoff was made in 1858 by the famous freighting firm of Russell, Majors and Waddell. The firm had secured a government contract to freight supplies across the prairie to Gen. Albert Johnston's army in Utah. The starting point was to be some town on the upper Missouri, with the choice being left to the firm. After considerable deliberation, Alexander Majors, who was handling the job for the freight line, selected Nebraska City.

Because the citizens of Nebraska City failed to keep their promise in the matter of laying out a road directly west, it was necessary for the heavy freight wagons to carry their great burdens along the old Ox-Bow trail which crossed Salt creek at Ashland and fol-lowed the Platte to Ft. Kearney. This route was much longer than a direct one would have been, and inasmuch as most of it lay along the Platte bottoms, it was slow going, particularly in rainy weather -and 12 to 15 miles a day was good time when the route was dry. Even so, each wagon sent from Nebraska City made a profit of from $2,000 to $3,000. When the government contract expired, Majors insisted that Nebraska City keep its promise to develop a direct route as the price of his continuing business there. This promise was kept. Surveyors were sent out and following them came a man with four mules hitched to a breaking plow to turn over a furrow. The w gon traveled astride the furrow and before long the Nebraska City-Ft. Kearney cutoff was well ma ked. By 1863, so much traffic had parsed over it that it was worn into deep ruts and was in most places about 200-feet wide.

Abandonment of Fort Revives Memories -

The newspapers reported a short time ago that Ft. Robinson, situated just west of Crawford in Dawes and Sioux counties, and one of the most active posts on the old frontier, was being abandoned as an army installation.

Ft. Robinson perhaps is best known to present day Nebras-kans as the army's largest remount station, famous for the splendid horses it furnished the cavalry. During World War II it gained considerable reputation as the reception and training center for war dogs of the army's K-9 corps.
In the old days though, Ft.

Robinson was far from being a mere training center. It was an outpost set down in the heart of the Indian country to prevent violence on the part of the restless Sioux, Cheyennes an Arapahoes chafing under the restraints which the white man was trying to place upon them.

The post was established in March of 1874. Like many other frontier army installa-tions it was first set up on a temporary basis to deal with an emergency situation. The emergency in this case resulted from the restlessness of the Indians at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies. Many of the Indians, led by impatient young braves like Crazy Horse, simply refused to accept reservation rule. The post was named in honor of Lt. Levi Robinson, who was killed by an Indian during this same emergency.

Permanency Needed

It soon became apparent to the war department that permanent installation was needed in connection with the Red Cloud agency. Building was begun in the autumn of 1874 and Camp Robinson gradually developed into a permanent fort. Events of the next few years justified all of the preparations

By 1876 the Black Hills gold rush had fanned a smoldering resentment on the part of the Indians into active warfare, and the Sioux, under Crazy Horse, again took to the warpath. This uprising led to the end of the road for the gallant young Crazy Horse, for in the same year he was bayonetted to death while trying to escape from the guard house at Ft. Robinson.

It was from Ft. Robinson, too, that Dull Knife led the Cheyennes on their last great break for f.eedom. The story of this flight from captivitiy in the fort is one of the great dramas of the old frontier.

Finally, it was from Ft. Robinson that troops were sent to dian uprising which ended in the battle of Wounded Knee on deal with the country's last In-December 29, 1890.

Act Now to Improve Tavern Conditions in Your Town

The men who will operate the taverns in your town another year are now being selected. It is the sincere desire of this Committee-and the brewing industry-that the best possible type of tavern operators be selected. The standard of tavern operators in Nebraska is high. Yet, in some communities, improvements can and should be made. Since the conditions in your taverns-and the conduct of the operators and patrons-affects your entire community, it is urged that licenses be refused to the negligent or unfit -those whose past record is unsatisfactory. You, as a good citizen, have a responsibility in helping to see that only good, law-abiding men are selected. The law encourages you to report bad conditions or bad conduct. Seek out your local authorities and give them all the helpful information you can. Do it now.
