Out of Old Nebraska 'PIKE'S PEAK OR BUST' RIVALED CALIFORNIA'S RUSH IN 1849

By James C. Olson Supt., State Historical Society. Nebraska had its own gold rush in the years 1858-59. No one struck it rich, and the excitement was short-lived, but while it lasted the territory of Nebraska enjoyed a boom which rivaled that of California in the days of '49.

The whole thing started with the discovery of a small quantity of gold in 1858 near the head waters of the South Platte, and particularly on Cherry creek. This area is now a part of Colorado, but was at that time included in the far-flung territory of Nebraska, which stretched from the Missouri river to the continental divide.

The territorial press seized upon the news with gusto and filled their columns with glowing stories of the great wealth awaiting prospectors in western Nebraska. These stories had their effect and the spring of '59 saw a great rush across the prairies to the diggings. The Nebraska City News reported a prediction that the total number of prospectors would reach 100,000 before the year was out.

Merchants in the Missouri river towns prepared to make a killing as they vied with one another for the privilege of outfitting the would-be prospectors. The newspapers were confident that those who stayed home to do business with the gold seekers, stood in a fair way to garner fortunes as great as would come to those who struck it rich in the mines.

There were others who believed that it was just plain foolishness to give up homes and business in the more settled regions of the territory to go gold hunting in the west. J. Sterling Morton, secretary of the territory, declared that the stories of gold had been circulated merely for the purpose of speculation in town lots at Denver City and other Rocky mountain villages.

Events soon proved correct those who had discredited the stories of great wealth to be found in the Nebraska diggings. By early summer wagons which had started out emblazoned with "Pikes Peak or Bust" began returning with "Busted" scrawled under their once confident signs.

Many of the disappointed gold-seekers blamed their fate on the newspapers and others in the river towns who had circulated the stories. A letter now in the Morton collection in the Love Memorial library at the university, states that the disappointed miners threatened to "billage" the towns, burn and sack them, hang the letterwriters, and make Nebraska a land of mourning.

No such dire threats were carried out, but for a short time during the summer of '59 there was scattered fighting all up and down the Missouri river and at least one editor barely escaped with his life.

Probably all of the editors would have been well advised to follow the example of the man who put out the "Billings Echo" at Wood River, Centre in Buffalo county, who urged the gold-seekers to change their minds and here to try agriculture and stock growing, and elsewhere dustrious pursuits, and you will not fail. That always has been good advice for prospective settlers in Nebraska.

Successful Farming Offers Fly-Free Farm

- 1. Clean up all fly-breeding places this Spring, and keep refuse hauled out to fields this Summer. 2. Spray all farm buildings you use as shelter for stock. Use a 2 1/2 per cent DDT solution for the job. 3. Spray all livestock with DDT—the strength of the solution should depend on the type of fly you are after. 4. If animals are regularly near the barn, use quick-killing sprays daily, to control the stable fly. — Successful Farming Magazine.

How Minors are Prevented from Breaking the Law

Minors in Nebraska face a fine of up to $50 if found guilty of purchasing alcoholic beverages through misrepresentation of age.

To discourage minors from attempting misrepresentation, this Committee provides retailers with "Sworn Statements" which must be signed in doubtful cases. The $50 fine for misstatement is emphasized.

The tavern keeper risks revocation or suspension of his license . . . the minor risks prosecution . . . in case of sales to minors through misrepresentation of age.

This is but one of many services to the public by the brewing industry of Nebraska in aiding law observance. It typifies our desire to keep the retailing of beer on the same high plane as the retailing of other products.
