Lois Hutchins Is Bride of Max Wilkins

PLEASANT VALLEY — A pretty wedding was solemnized at the Pleasant Valley church Sunday afternoon when Lois Hutchins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lindberg, became the bride of Max Wilkins. Rev. Gene Alderson, of Bassett, performed the ceremony.
The bride appeared in a long white formal gown, the bodice being of white satin with long sleeves, and the skirt of ninon fashioned in the back with a long train. She was given in marriage by her father. Her sister, Ruth Lindberg, in a pink formal, acted as matron-of-honor, and Elton Wilkins, of Lincoln, brother of the bridegroom, acted as bestman.
Mrs. Robert Worth played the wedding music and accompanied Mrs. Axel Borg, who sang "I Love You Truly."
Due to adverse road conditions, the reception scheduled to take place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lindberg was held instead at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fox.
Mr. and Mrs. Wilkins will be at home at Lincoln, where he is attending the University of Nebraska and she is a nurse at the Veterans' hospital.
Among the out-of-town guests were the bridegroom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. Wilkins, of Aurora; Elton Wilkins, of Lincoln, and his daughter, Carolyn; Rev. and Mrs. Gene Alderson and family, of Bassett.

Road Ranch a Necessity to Emigrant

By James C. Olson
The road ranch, that institution which grew up along the overland trails in Nebraska, might well be described as the covered wagon tourist camp.
It served the same purpose for the emigrant making his weary way westward as does its modern counterpart for tourists speeding across the state in a few hours.
Although they hardly could have advertised innerspring mattresses (or any mattresses at all for that matter) or hot and cold running water, these early road ranches did fill a definite need in the lives of the early western travelers.
They were spaced 12 to 15 miles apart — a good day's journey by ox team — and provided facilities for taking care of both the emigrants and their stock. In addition to providing accommodations the road ranches also offered a certain amount of protection from the Indians.

Wild Bill Launches Career

They usually consisted of a large log or underground stable, a ranch house where travelers might spend the night, possibly a store or two, blacksmith shop and several saloons. The smaller ones were little more than private dwellings which occasionally accommodated travelers and served them meals. Many of the larger ranches also served as stations for the overland stage. And some of them along the route of the pony express also served that institution during its brief existence.
One of these early establishments which later became most famous of all was the Rock creek stage station located in Jefferson county near the present city of Fairbury. It was here that Wild Bill Hickok started his notorious career by killing David McCandles, proprietor of the station.

Maintains Own Brewery

Another station which became well known was the Boyd ranch located on the Utah-California-Oregon trail in Buffalo county. James E. Boyd, the owner and proprietor of this ranch, later became the governor of Nebraska. The fame of the Boyd ranch was widespread. It maintained its own brewery and had an ice-house.
Another well-known establishment was Cheese creek ranch, located in the western part of Lancaster county on the old Nebraska City-Kearney trail. It got its name because the people who operated it specialized in the making of cheese which they sold to the freighters and others who stopped at the ranch.

PETER SARPY FIRST DEVELOPED NEBRASKA'S WATERWAYS

Historical data provided through the courtesy of the Nebraska State Historical Society

Born in St. Louis in 1805, Peter Sarpy opened a fur trading post at the present site of Bellevue, Nebraska, in 1823, becoming the first white settler on the west bank of the Missouri. His success with the Indians was phenomenal. He married Nicomi, daughter of an Iowa chief, was given the Indian name of "White Chief" by the Ojibwa and Omaha. A firm believer in the future of Nebraska and surrounding territory, Sarpy accumulated a number of firsts for his record. He established the first ferries across the Missouri, Loup and Elkhorn Rivers, laid out the towns of Bellevue and Decatur, introduced the first steam ferry on the Missouri and obtained friendly passage with the Indians for John C. Fremont and Brigham Young on their westward treks. He died in 1862 at Plattsmouth before realizing his dream of seeing Nebraska become a state.
Like Peter Sarpy, Consumers Public Power also strives to bring Nebraskans greater benefits through the development of the state's resources. While providing low-cost electricity throughout Nebraska, Consumers contributes valuable support for vital irrigation to thousands of Nebraska acres, and aids substantially in the industrial and economic progress of the hundreds of communities it serves. Consumers' economical statewide operation has resulted in lowering the cost of electricity to all Nebraska until now, Nebraskans, on the average, enjoy the lowest electric rates in the middle-west. The steady development of Nebraska, started by her pioneers, is reaching full maturity through such contributions as those made by Nebraska's own electric utility, Consumers Public Power District.
