Let's Look at the Power Picture

Tri-County's Kingsley Dam
Where more water is stored today than ever before.

Johnson No. 2
One of Tri-County's hydro, generating more power than ever.

WHAT'S HAPPENED TO NEBRASKA'S POWER SUPPLY
For those who might justly ask this question—let us say that Nebraska is producing far more power today than ever before. Customers served by Consumers Public Power District used better than 30% more kilowatt hours in 1946 than they did in 1936. Customers continue to use the greater benefits of electricity until at certain peak periods the demand almost reaches the point of supply, while war and its resultant manufacturing conditions have retarded the construction of new facilities needed to provide additional power.

Something Is Being Done!

Additional power supply facilities are being constructed, but cannot be completed until 1949. Meanwhile, all power supply agencies are working together to obtain maximum power from combined facilities. This power situation may continue to be critical during mid-summer and mid-winter peak periods. But it is expected that normal requirements can be served satisfactorily until new equipment is ready to supply additional power for Nebraska's new industries, farm electrification and better living.
