Atkinson Gals Have Fun at Expense of Liveryman

60 YEARS AGO
November 10, 1887

From the Atkinson Graphic: "Monday evening a party of fun-loving girls in the south part of town started out for a Halloween spree. In the course of their fun they fastened a tick-tack to the window of one of our liverymen and proceeded to work it. In about two minutes the liveryman flopped out of bed and rushed in pursuit of the damsels, clad only in his native modesty and a shirt. The girls took in the situation with a glance and scattered like leaves before the autumn gale, and after a run of five or six blocks he gave up the pursuit. Picking about a peck of sand-burrs off of his unprotected shanks, he meandered back to bed. The tick-tackers haven't got over the shock yet."

The road between the depot and bridge across the Elkhorn ought to be graded and fixed in such shape that farmers could haul respectable loads over it. The merchants ought to look into this matter at once.

On Tuesday evening at the home of the groom's father, Rev. N. S. Lowrie spoke the word that united for life the hearts and the hands of Mr. Willie F. Richards and Miss Elizabeth Geary, of Inman. There was a nice little company of friends and relatives to witness the ceremony. The happy couple took the morning train Friday for a visit to Washington county, after which they will return to Holt county and make their home near Inman.

The king of jazz, Paul Whiteman, does other things these days besides shaking a stick at his orchestra. As owner of the Walking Horse farm in New Jersey, he is also a breeder of fine cattle. Whiteman is pictured here with his blue ribbon Aberdeen Angus winner, "Erica III of Walking Horse farm," at the recent New Jersey association's Aberdeen Angus show in Trenton where he showed the prize animal.

A four-horse team drawing a load of baled hay encountered the procession of buggies as it progressed up Fourth street and the animals were so frightened at the strange contrivances that they bolted.

In fact, the orchestra is called the Marne because its music sounds like that famous battle.

Out of Old Nebraska —

Nebraska's First Newspaper

Published 93 Years Ago

By Supt. James C. Olson, State Historical Society

This November 15 marks the anniversary of the origin of printing in Nebraska. On that date in 1854 the first newspaper ever printed in Nebraska, The Nebraska Palladium, published at "Belle View," came from the press. Earlier issues of the same paper had carried a Nebraska dateline, but they had been printed across the river in St. Mary, Ia.

Those early pioneers were well aware of the significance of the step which they were taking when they brought printing to the territory. Such dignitaries as could be assembled in the frontier village were on hand to take part in the operation.

The first proof sheet was taken by Acting-Governor Thomas B. Cuming. It was read by Chief Justice Fenner Ferguson of the territorial supreme court.

The first Nebraska newspaper was a far-cry from the newspapers published in Nebraska today. There were no headlines, as we are accustomed to them, no firsts, and no pictures. The wire of the paper's four pages was devoted almost entirely to poetry and articles taken from eastern magazines, and the third and fourth pages were devoted almost exclusively to advertising. Only on the second page did local news and editorial comment appear—and most of this, incidentally, was editorial comment.

One of the few short news items, though, is of particular interest to a later generation. It states simply, "J. S. Morton, assistant editor of the Detroit Free-Press, and lady... arrived at Bellevue on the 13th inst."

Though the statement on his connection with the Detroit Free-Press is incorrect, this was the same Morton who was to find a place in the Hall of Fame as author of Arbor day, and who was to play such an important part in the development of Nebraska.

Judging from the editorial columns, the principal issue before the people of the territory was the location of the capital. By the time printing had reached Bellevue there were rumors that the capital was to escape to Omaha, and the editor devotes a column of that first Nebraska newspaper in extolling the virtues of Bellevue as a seat of commerce and the territorial government, and denouncing those who would take the latter elsewhere. History records, of course, that this first Nebraska editorial campaign ended in defeat for the fourth estate.

So far as is known, there are only two copies of the newspaper still in existence. One is in the files of the Nebraska State Historical society, and the other in the Henry E. Huntington library in San Marino, Calif.
