BIKINI EVACUEES MAKE ANOTHER MOVE . . . Evacuated from Bikini atoll when the U. S. armed services were conducting "Operation Crossroads" with the atomic bomb, these Bikini natives lived for the past two years on the island of Rongerik. They found conditions unsuitable, however, and asked to be moved. Here, some of them are leaving a ship at Kwajalein, their new home. Apparently each move they make brings them a step closer to civilization. In contrast to their former habit, all now wear clothes. Kwajalein is to be only a temporary home for these Pacific nomads until a permanent one can be found.

Nebraskans Remember Big Snow Storms in Mid-April

By Supt. James C. Olson, State Historical Society

After the winter we've had this year, perhaps it's the work of a kill-joy to remind Nebraskans that we have had terribly severe snow storms as late as mid-April. Indeed, one of the worst blizzards in the history of the state occurred on Easter Sunday, April 14, 1873.

There are those who claim that it was even worse than the celebrated blizzard of January 12, 1888. Robert Harvey, for example, once wrote in the Nebraska State Journal that those who looked upon the 1888 storm as the worst in history, "certainly never saw a real blizzard."

Be that as it may, the Easter storm of 1873 was a harrowing and discouraging experience for the pioneer settlers in the new state of Nebraska. Conditions in the 1870's were anything but propitious and it seemed at times that nature and low prices had ganged up in perpetual warfare on the Nebraska farmer.

The situation was so bad that some of the state's newspapers believed that out of loyalty to Nebraska they should play down the stories of the storm. Most of them though, in the time honored tradition of the fourth estate told the story as they saw it, and we have a rather complete newspaper record of this Easter blizzard.

The storm resulted in a distressingly large loss of livestock, not because of the cold but because the snow was unusually wet and heavy. One pioneer reported that one-half of his chickens were suffocated by the snow banking over them and those that lived had all their small feathers pulled out by the heavy snow. This situation appears to have been fairly general in the path of the storm. Some more resourceful pioneers made coats of wool cloth to keep their chickens warm until they grew more feathers.

4-H CLUB NEWS

EAGLE CREEK

By Gene O'Neill, Reporter
The Eagle Creek 4-H club met at the home of John and Gene O'Neill on Sunday, April 11, with 8 members present. The meeting was called to order by the president, Galen Hull. Roll call was answered by the naming of a well-known artist and some of his or her paintings. Sir Edwin Henry Landseer seemed to be the favorite among the club members.

Betty Curran was voted in as a member of the club. A demonstration was given by Doris Sterns on "Sewing Seams." Instructions were given to the sewing club members on the use of patterns, also to the calf club members on making rope halters.

The learning to sew members made plans to equip their sewing boxes.

Visitors were Mrs. Loretta Hynes, Mary Joan, Robert and Mrs. Mamie O'Neill. The next meeting will be with Lois Ann and Harold Peterson on Sunday, May 30.
